Giants Defeat Yankees, 6-1; Hubbell Gives But 7 Safeties

Steady Rain Mars Game; Schumacher, Gomez to Pitch Today.

By Shirley Povich,
Sports Editor of The Post.

New York, Sept. 30.—Out of the fingers of Carl Hubbell spun a magnificent assortment of screwballs and curves this afternoon and into the keeping of the Giants passed the opening game of the World Series.

It is, indeed, true what they've been saying about Hubbell, the Yankees learned to their dismay at the rain-swept Polo Grounds where the crafty Giant southpaw ushered his teammates to victory in the first of New York's baseball civil war.

By the score of 6 to 1, the Giants won the ball game and, as advised, Hubbell, with each rise and dip of his bread-winning left arm, throttled the big guns of the Yankees' attack. With 39,419 non-combatants in the stands, the dark-visaged Arkansan thoroughly subjugated the American League.

Yields Seven Hills.

Wafting a treacherous wet ball plateward with seemingly no more concern than if he were playing catch with kids in the neighborhood, the slat-like southpaw surrendered only seven hits to the Yankees. Eight he struck out. Only one did he walk. Lou Gehrig and Bill Dickey, the particular prizes of the Yankee batting order, he held hitless.

Into a unique World Series record Hubbell lifted his Giant teammates today. Not a putout did the Giant outfielders receive, so clever did the southpaw manipulate his dippy-dew hooks which died off the Yankees' bats.

One run he did permit. Back in the third inning he edged a fast ball too close to the heart of the fast ball of Ruffing, Dick Barry, the infield son of a former big league infielder, whacked a home run into the upper field deck to tie the score for Hubbell in the fifth.

And in the eighth, Ruffing and the Yankees' infield collapsed. One run Ruffing forced across the plate as he lost control of the wet ball. A long fly by Travis Jackson delivered another unto the Giants. And then the Yankee cracked. A ball took a bad hop past Lazzeri for a hit by Hubbell, Crosetti flung it back wide of the plate, Dickey in turn heaved it wildly against the two more runs cascaded across the plate as the Giants registered a four-run inning that sealed their triumph.

Tonight Manager Terry of the Giants announced he would send Hal Schumacher to the mound tomorrow, while Manager McCarthy will rely on Vernon. "Lefty" Gomez.

That opening battle of New York's exclusive World Series was not a sell-out. A night long rain and ominous morning clouds permeated with watery vapors discouraged the expected rush for the 24,000 unreserved seats placed on sale this morning.

From the upper tiers in left and rightfields great empty spots gaped at the reserved seat customers. Eight thousand of the $3.30 seats were uncalled for and the gathering.

Hypnotism Solves Marital Triangle, Professor Claims

Atlanta, Sept. 30.—Hypnotism was disclosed today as a material aid in relieving a young married man of an obsession infatuation for a woman not his wife.

Prof. H. W. Martin, of Emory University, told of the incident. He said the man had come to him "highly nervous and irritable," seeking advice on how to break away.

At the man's request, the psychology professor said, he hypnotized him, gave him a good lecture, and succeeded in eliminating the moral conflict.

When he first came into my office I wouldn't let him sit down to see him jump through the window," he added, "but after the hypnotic treatment he was quite a different individual."

Prof. Martin said the university was "not conducting a clinic," and was interested in hypnotism only as a study of psychological principles.

He predicted a bright future for the art "when it is better understood and appreciated."

Jake Powell Caught at Third Base in Attempted Double Steal

Landon Quotes Pension Critic, Angers Expert

File Unit Says Kansan Violated Confidence on Social Law Report.

By the Associated Press.

Topeka, Kans., Sept. 30.—A research finding that the New Deal's social security law decreed the sacrifice of "even health and decency" by low income families as the price of old-age security was made public today by Gov. Alf M. Landon.

He said the study was made by the Twentieth Century Fund.

In New York, however, John B. Andrews, chairman of the Twentieth Century Fund's old-age security committee, said in a statement tonight that Landon "misrepresents the sponsorship of the report."

At the same time, Evans Clark, director of the fund, which is a foundation endowed by Edward A. Filene, Boston merchant, asserted the report was "given to Mr. Landon with the express stipulation that it be treated as confidential."

The study held that the law's attempt to finance old-age insurance exclusively through flat pay roll and wage taxes was unsound, and put almost the entire burden on the earners of the Nation.

Critical of Congress.

"They (legislators)," the report said, "blithely legislated on the assumption that more savings in justice should and could be made, and they were ignorant of or indifferent to the fact that persons already too poor to save will be made still poorer so that they obtain security in old age."

The Republican Presidential nominee who, in a Milwaukee address Saturday assailed the law as "unjust, unworkable, stupidly drafted and wastefully financed," gave reporters copies of the study with the remark:

"This report was made by the Twentieth Century Fund, supported by the Filene Foundation. It is part of a general study of the social security act. A study of the Townsend plan was published by them last July. Although this report was completed in April or May, it has been held up."

Andrews, in his New York statement, said the report represented merely the views of the fund staff and was not a statement of the committee. He said the fund's research staff, Andrews said.

Driver Facing Fine Ends Life; Told Son 'I'll Not Come Back'

William T. Crater, Dreading Levy of More Than $25 on Traffic Charge, Shoots Self in Basement of His Home.

By the Associated Press.

When William T. Crater left his home at 1021 E street northeast for Police Court yesterday morning, where he was to face reckless driving charges he told his son: "If my fine is more than $25 I won't come back."

But he did come back. Several hours later, his son, Walter Crater, 23, found his father in the basement, a bullet through his head.

Crater had not been fined. When his case was called an assistant corporation counsel had recommended that his fine be $25, but Judge Edward M. Curran postponed the case in order that testimony of the principal complainant, Capt. Richard Mansfield, of the Ninth Precinct, could be heard.

Capt. Mansfield did not appear because he was at Union Station on duty for President Roosevelt's arrival. When the policeman did reach court, Crater did not answer to his name. Judge Curran issued an attachment for him. But Crater was dead before the attachment was served.

Capt. Mansfield said last night that Crater was arrested at Ninth street and Maryland avenue northeast Tuesday when he drove his car past a stop sign and through a red light.

For the past few months Crater had been driving a truck for his younger son, Walter, a butter and egg salesman, who said his father had been dependent for several weeks. Walter and another son, William T. Crater, Jr., 23, survive.

Twins Complicated Trial; Case Halted

Detroit, Sept. 30 (AP).—The complaining witness in a $120 holdup saw double in court today—it was done with twins and burst court with mirrors—and the case was dismissed.

When Mrs. Paul Sidilo was robbed by two men September 25, her husband thought he recognized one of them. Eddie Lantivich was detained. Later Lantivich received a blackeye in a fight, but Sidilo readily pointed him out in court today.

Then Eddie's sister, Mrs. Anna Kemp, brought in his twin brother, George, who was dressed like Eddie and had a counterfeit black eye to match Eddie's real one.

Sidilo looked at one, then the other, shook his head and gave up. "We would never have put on this little act," Mrs. Kemp told the judge. "Except that I know my brother is innocent."

The prosecutor's motion for a dismissal was granted.

Browder Jailed at Terre Haute In Move to Bar Campaign Talk

By the Associated Press.

Terre Haute, Ind., Sept. 30.—City officials who warned Earl Browder, Communist candidate for President, that he would be jailed if he came here, made good their threat today.

Browder, arrested on a vagrancy charge as he stepped from a train here this morning, spent the day in a county jail cell while party workers scurried about seeking his release so that he might address a scheduled meeting tonight.

Undismayed by threats of court reprisals, Mayor Samuel Beecher and Police Chief James C. Yates issued a stern injunction against any attempt of the Communists to congregate and emphasized they would not permit the party rally and the address by Browder, which was scheduled to be broadcast by Terre Haute and Evansville, Ind., radio stations.

"We have had our share of trouble from such agitation," Yates said. "Neither Browder nor any one advertising himself as belonging to the Communist Party will be permitted to hold a meeting in Terre Haute."

Power Groups Agree on Plan To Study Pool

U. S., Private Leaders Map Southeast Step, Confer on TVA Contracts.

By Robert C. Albright.

Agreement was reached last night between President Roosevelt, Federal power agencies and private utility and financial executives to study possibilities of a giant Southeastern power pool making joint use of existing transmission networks controlled by Federal and private agencies.

Almost immediately negotiations were begun for at least temporary extension of existing contracts between Commonwealth & Southern Corporation and the Tennessee Valley Authority for interchange of power and common use of transmission lines. Present contracts expire November 3.

Executives prominent in the utility field declined to express approval or disapproval of the President's proposals as they left the White House. A carefully worded joint statement was issued by Chairman Frank R. McNinch, of the Federal Power Commission, and President Wendell L. Wilkie, of Commonwealth & Southern, expressing the views of the group.

"It appeared from the discussion of experience here and abroad there might be savings made in pooling of transmission which would be beneficial to the public and investors," the statement read.

Consequently, it was agreed that during the next few weeks there would be explored further and in detail these possibilities. In the meantime, the TVA and the Commonwealth & Southern are to see whether they could not agree on an extension of the present agreement between them.

Staged on request of the President, a conference was confined entirely to the pooling of Southeastern power in the TVA area, although the President in his invitation had suggested establishment of similar pools at Bonneville Dam and in other areas.

Financial and utility executives leaving the conference, including Owen D. Young, chairman of the board of the General Electric Co., Thomas W. Lamont, partner of J. P. Morgan & Co., and President Preston S. Arkwright, of the Georgia Power Co., were asked by reporters if they were "satisfied" with the proposals.

Other Walkouts.

There also was a fish butchers' strike in San Francisco, a 26-day-old strike of 3,200 lettuce workers in Salinas, Calif., a "technical" strike of 400 machinists, another of 120 oil workers, and one of 110 battery workers in Oakland, 300 employees of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer in Seattle, where three large wholesale drug stores also were closed by a warehousemen's strike affecting 300 people, 600

Capital Baby Born As Auto Hastens Mother to Hospital

For the second time within a week the stork, that democratic baby-bringer, has put the misadventure and complications of traffic to shame. Yesterday a speeding automobile en route to Emergency Hospital, became an improvised maternity ward when Mrs. Claire Robinson Caskie, 22, of 2215 Fort street northwest, gave birth to a husky baby boy in the rear seat.

She had left her home shortly before 8 a. m. with her husband, Marion, for Sibley Hospital, where the stork was supposed to appear in the afternoon.

Mother and child were doing nicely, thank you, nurse said. Mrs. Caskie is the daughter-in-law of Marion M. Caskie, Interstate Commerce Commissioner.

Last week Mrs. Kate Dernbaugh, of Capitol Heights, Md., gave birth to a son at Garfield Hospital only a few hours after she had been slightly hurt when her husband's automobile skidded and overturned.

The hazardous 6,540-mile hop from England already had reduced the field of nine original entrants

New Commission Seeks Extension of Accord on West Coast.

Acts After Parley With Roosevelt; Trouble Spreads in East.

By Sidney Olson.

Working fast under the threatening cloud of a longshoremen's strike on the Pacific Coast, the new Maritime Commission strove all day yesterday and into the night in a last-minute effort to avert the walkout.

After a morning conference with President Roosevelt, the newly chosen commissioners sent a stream of telegrams to Harry Bridges, president of the Pacific Coast section of the Longshoremen's Association, and to the shipowners' organization.

The wires pleaded for mutual agreement to a 60-day extension of the old compromise maritime working agreements under which the 37,000 men have labored since the bloody 1934 waterfront strike paralyzed West Coast shipping.

The unions, shortly before midnight, agreed to a 30-day extension. Holds High Hopes.

The old agreement expired at midnight. Rear Admiral Henry A. Wiley, chairman of the commission, said he had "high hopes" that a new compromise could be effected. On his emergence from the White House, reporters rushed the Admiral in a body.

"Now lay on your oars, men," he said. "There's nothing new except that we're going to keep on working on this thing until we solve it."

In San Francisco, meanwhile, according to Associated Press dispatches, shipping slowed to a snail's pace, with only 17 ships on schedule to move in and out of the bay.

Trouble on East Coast.

As the Labor Department's Assistant Secretary Edward F. McGrady labored in San Francisco to halt the looming tie-up of ships at docks, trouble flared on the East Coast.

Two hundred and fifty longshoremen at Miami, Fla., went on strike, delaying sailing of the Clyde-Mallory steamer Shawnee for New York. A wage dispute in Charleston, S. C., forced the British steamer Glenelg to postpone taking on a cargo of tobacco and cotton consigned to England.

In New York, members of the crew of the President Roosevelt, a United States liner, prevented its scheduled sailing by a "sit-down" strike.

According to the Associated Press, when the "all ashore" bugle sounded 200 men of the crew swung double duffs over their shoulders and marched down gangplanks with departing ship visitors. They were ordered off the pier.

Ordered on Strike.

Deck and engineering staffs of the steamship Pennsylvania, of the Panama Pacific Line, and the American Trader, of the American Merchant Line, both owned by the International Mercantile Marine Co., also were ordered on strike.

The trouble is factional within the Marine Fitters, Oilers and Waterenders Union.

In Miami, Federal Conciliator J. C. Howard, seeking a truce in the local longshoremen's strike, arranged a conference between labor officials and union chiefs for today.

The serious possibilities latent in the Pacific Coast situation were shown by the fact that 6,000 men already had left their jobs late last night on strikes of various kinds. On the San Francisco waterfront police prepared to put 100 uniformed men and radio cars today, as shipowners worked on their list of conditions under which they will employ men hereafter.

Arkwright Never Gries.

Each declined to comment referring reporters to the joint statement. Arkwright added, laughingly, "I never cry about anything."

"Experience abroad" mentioned by McNinch and Wilkie was understood to refer to the famous English

Insurgent Forces March on Madrid, Take Nearby City

Heads Rebel Regime

Illescas, 22 Miles Away, Seized; Capital's Fall Held Imminent.

Private Citizens To Be Evacuated

Rebels Invest Franco as 'Chief of the State' at Burgos Rites.

The Spanish Revolt.

Rebel leaders claimed insurgent forces had driven loyalists from Illescas, only 22 miles from Madrid, and were pressing on toward the capital.

Reinforcements were poured out from Madrid in an effort to halt the rebels' advance. Evacuation of children from the capital was begun.

In a ceremony at Burgos, seat of the insurgent junta, Gen. Francisco Franco, rebel commander in chief, was invested officially with power as chief of the Spanish state.

Spain's representation at Geneva made public charges that Italy, Germany and Portugal were aiding the Spanish rebel cause.

Loyalists Driven Back.

Copyright, 1936, by the Associated Press. Toledo, Spain, Sept. 30.—Rebel conquerors of Toledo tonight declared they had driven government forces from Illescas, only 22 miles from Madrid.

Headquarters for the picked legions of insurgents said they had rolled through the last sizeable city between Toledo and Madrid and pressed on toward the Loyalist capital during the night.

Their rear guard methodically wiped out scattered government resistance in the Toledo sector. The rebel leaders ordered a "cleaning" of Toledo to make that city "the whitest in Spain."

"The insurgent high command at Burgos asserted its forces had encircled Madrid and said the fall of the government capital was 'imminent.'"

Attack at Bilbao.

(Other reports given out at Burgos said troops under Gen. Emilio Mola, rebel conqueror of Irun and San Sebastian, pierced the government defenses around Bilbao, last major northeastern coastal city held by the government.)

Within Toledo, the rebel liberators of the men, women and children, besieged for 72 days in the Alcazar fortress, ordered all inhabitants to surrender their arms.

Methodically, the insurgents set about checking the political sympathies of residents who remained in the town. It was stated the citizens might be shot if they did not bring in their guns, holding them over their heads.

After an inspection of the dynamited Alcazar by Gen. Francisco Franco, many of the rebels who had been besieged stayed on within the crumbling walls.

The work of evacuating the occupants to homes progressed slowly, and life in the city's dank dungeons continued much the same as during the siege.

Nuns Cook Food.

Five nuns continued to cook for those still living in the fortress, but they no longer were restricted to a diet of fried horse fat.

Homeless families gathered in corners and ate by candle-light, their daily ration of shot, shell and dynamite at an end.

Eight government prisoners, held in the fortress since the start of the siege, lay on mattresses in the dimly lighted halls.

Books from the library of the former cadet school were still standing in bullet-riddled piles, and the windows which they had been used to barricade.

The sound of rifle fire at one point during the day caused the Alcazar inhabitants to start up with terror, but it was short lived.

The rebel leaders tersely announced that 74 government militiamen holding out in the San Juan Hospital across the Tago River had been killed or captured.

Lines Bolstered.

Roosevelt Off For Brief Tour In Four States

Takes Part in Ecuador-Peru Boundary Dispute Conference.

President Roosevelt, after a whirlwind 14 hours in the White House, swung away at midnight on another lap in his campaign for re-election, bound for West Virginia, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York.

His arrival at the executive office yesterday morning at 10 a. m. was the signal for the White House secretariat to pile a mass of affairs of state on his desk, while his visitors, schedule was loaded all day.

Besides two intensive power pool conferences, in which the President first met Government experts and then the utility chiefs, he received a delegation of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom; saw the new Maritime Commission and instructed them on the conduct of the negotiations between shipowners and longshoremen; saw Clay Williams, former NRA chief; Daniel W. Bell, acting budget director, and Jesse H. Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Before lunch the Government power authorities came in. At luncheon the President's guest was Harry L. Hopkins, Works Progress administrator. In the afternoon he left the office for a short period to preside in the Blue Room at direct negotiations between Peru and Ecuador looking to settlement of their 100-year-old boundary controversy. Returning, he saw the utility heads and then held a special interview with John D. Wines, former chairman of the Social Security Board, at which he accepted the latter's resignation.

After the Winant visit, the President related before dinner, and it was believed that he began work on his Pittsburgh speech in the evening. In his new campaign swing he will appear at Elkins, W. Va., this afternoon, appear on the train platform at intervals during the day, and on his arrival at Pittsburgh tonight deliver his second major campaign address.

Then he will head for New Jersey, where he will dedicate a new medical center in Jersey City, and proceed to New York City for a World Series baseball game.

The formal opening of negotiations between Peru and Ecuador began with a reaffirmation of his faith in the peaceful settlement of international disputes. In a statement released subsequently at the State Department, the President said:

"The maintenance of peace in this Western Hemisphere must be the first concern of all our peoples and of our governments. I am confident that your deliberations here will furnish further encouragement and support for the practical application of the principle of the peaceful settlement of disputes among nations.

The diplomats present were: Ecuadorian delegation: Delegates, Dr. Homero Viteri Lafont, president delegation with rank of ambassador; Dr. Alejandro Ponce Borja, with rank of minister; Dr. Jose Vicente Trujillo, with rank of minister.

Secretariat, Dr. Enrique Arroyo Delgado, general secretary; Sr. Jorge Perez Serrano, secretary; Sr. Ricardo Chiriboga Villagomez, secretary; Sr. Nestor Ponce, secretary.

Peruvian delegation: Delegates, Dr. Francisco Tudala Y Varela, Dr. Arturo Garcia Salazar, Dr. Victor Andres Belaunde.

Secretariat, Dr. Gonzalez Ulloa C. secretary general; Sr. Carlos Ortiz de Zevallos, second secretary; Miss Rosina Vega C., secretary; Sr. Arturo Garcia y Garcia, attaché.

Wendel Plans to Fight Return to New Jersey

Brooklyn, N. Y., Sept. 30 (AP)—Paul H. Wendel, former Trenton, N. J., attorney whose arrest and "confession" delayed the electrocution of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, announced today that he will oppose returning to New Jersey to stand trial on nine indictments charging embezzlement, pending since 1931.

"I left with the State's acquiescence at the invitation of New York to be a material witness here against those who kidnaped and tortured me," Wendel said. "Under the law I am not a fugitive and cannot be extradited."

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 30 (AP)—Prosecutor Erwin E. Marshall, of Mercer County, expressed surprise today at Paul H. Wendel's refusal to return to New Jersey and said he would "take necessary steps" to bring him here to stand trial on old embezzlement charges pending against him.

Politics and People

Roosevelt's Repudiation of Radicalism Cheers Party Stalwarts in N. Y., Center of U. S. Wealth.

By Franklin W. Waltham

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Sept. 30.—President Roosevelt's speech last night repudiating the support of Communists or other alien factions and portraying the New Deal as the savior of the country from left wing radicalism was admirable for the purpose for which it was designed. It succeeded, for the day at least, in cheering up the New York Democratic Party stalwarts.

And these party stalwarts apparently needed cheering up. Dislike of the New Deal and its associates appears to be spreading in this State. It is not only the fact that New York is the center of the Nation's wealth—and the New Deal is plainly hostile to wealth—but other factors have entered into the situation in recent days.

Some of the Tammany boys have indicated their dislike of the President on the ground that he and Democratic Chairman James A. Farley have not played ball with them. Some of the Tammanyites still have a soft spot in their hearts for Al Smith, which was evidenced by the applause, mingled with boos, incidentally, which greeted mention of the former Democratic standard-bearer's name last night. They are torn between going with Al Smith or Franklin D. Roosevelt.

As if these factors were not sufficiently disturbing to the peace of mind of the New York Democratic stalwarts, the affaire Dubinsky has entered to make them really jittery. It was Jim Farley's idea to put David Dubinsky on the list of Democratic electors in order to nail down the vote of the garment workers, since Mr. Dubinsky is the former Socialist chieftain of those workers.

Entirely unexpected, however, was the accusation that Mr. Dubinsky had contributed funds—or had forwarded funds—to the Spanish Communists.

Now the latter have been engaged in the business of burning or otherwise destroying a few Catholic churches—or so we are led to believe by cable reports. And the backbone of New York Democracy is Irish Catholics, greatly devoted to the perpetuation of their church.

Thus it is no wonder that even those Democratic ward and precinct leaders who want to support Mr. Roosevelt have become greatly disturbed over those associated with his candidacy, and somewhat jumpy every time William Randolph Hearst's newspapers have suggested a link between the Communists and Mr. Roosevelt.

Such are the apparent reasons for the kind of speech Mr. Roosevelt made last night—that along with a possible desire on his part to anticipate the speech which Al Smith will make in New York City tomorrow night. In January Mr. Smith linked the President with Red Moscow, and it apparently was figured by the President that he would refer to the subject again, possibly asserting that recent developments vindicated his words on that former occasion.

At all events, that is the politics of the speech. And let it be said that Mr. Roosevelt, keenly sensitive to every political vibration, did an unusually good job on that score.

in comforting his party workers on the Communist issue—giving them a reply to the charges and seeking to make the old wicked Republicans out as the real undercover friends of the Communists.

Be that as it may, Mr. Roosevelt did not answer the contention that the American Communists, on the whole, are supporting him this year. Only very silly people believe that the squire of Hyde Park is a Communist, or that he desires that the Communism be victorious in America. So in that respect, his speech did not meet the issue.

The issue is that Mr. Roosevelt has conducted the Government of this country in such a way during the last 3½ years as to attract the support of Communists and to alienate the support of conservative men and women who have contributed substantially during their lives to making America the foremost and economic unit of the world—and among those he has alienated are many lifelong Democrats and former friends and supporters of the President.

The question is not whether Mr. Roosevelt wants the Communists to support him. Of course, he does not—since their open support is a greater liability than their meager numbers constitute an asset. If Mr. Roosevelt is the forward-looking liberal, wishing to preserve the American democratic system, which he professes to be, and if he has effectively thwarted Communism designs on this country, why are the Communists supporting him?

That question remains to be answered. Perhaps Earl Browder, the Communist chieftain in this country, is the only person who can answer it—since he has taken the lead in urging his followers of the necessity of re-electing President Roosevelt. But one line of thought that might be suggested is this:

Has not the President evidenced his desire in several ways that he favors for this country a planned economy, and does not the best economic thought of the world lean to the view that a planned economy is impossible without the eventual establishment of a totalitarian form of government, and is that not a choice between Communism and fascism—and do not the American Communists see in that situation a better prospect for their hopes than in a perpetuation of American democracy?

Despite all the suffering and chaos and economic disequilibrium which existed in this nominally happy country in 1932, it is silly and childish to compare that period to the eve of the French revolution—as Mr. Roosevelt did by inference—and to intimate that this country was on the verge of succumbing to Communism.

But for the sake of the argument let us assume all that. And let us assume that Mr. Roosevelt snatched the prize away from the hands of the Communists. It Tried to Unlink His Administration From Reds, Chairman Charges.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 30.—Republican National Chairman John D. M. Hamilton today said President Roosevelt, in "his first admittedly political speech" at Syracuse, "immediately went on the defensive in an attempt to unlink his administration from Communism."

The chairman, who stopped off at the Eastern division headquarters here en route to Chicago, said in a prepared statement "clever words are not enough, Mr. Roosevelt."

Hamilton referred to the President's mention of Alfred E. Smith, in which Mr. Roosevelt praised Smith's record as Governor of New York with the legislative record of Senator Robert Wagner when he was in the Assembly at Albany—and declared:

"Now you seek to remember him (Smith) again. Aren't you a bit late, Mr. Roosevelt?"

Accuses Dubinsky Anew.

Hamilton again brought up his charge that David Dubinsky, president of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, a Presidential elector on the Democratic and American Labor Party ballots in New York, had contributed $5,000 to Spanish Communists, a charge which Dubinsky has denied, saying instead the money was given to the International Federation of Trade Unions for relief work among the loyalist forces.

The chairman pointed out that the President said "communism is not a controversy between the two major parties," and declared: "But it is, Mr. Roosevelt, just as long as you retain Mr. Dubinsky, a supporter of Spanish Communists, as a Presidential elector in your behalf. You cannot go before the American people and say, as you said in Syracuse last night, that you 'repudiate the support of any advocate of communism' until you force Mr. Dubinsky to get off the Democratic ballot in your home State."

With regard to Smith, the Republican chairman said:

"After you climbed up, you forgot Smith. Now, as in your speech at Syracuse last night, you seek to remember him again. Aren't you a bit late, Mr. Roosevelt? I cannot speak for Gov. Smith, but I think that he himself, will tell you so on the radio tomorrow night."

Hamilton referred to the first of former Gov. Smith's campaign addresses in Carnegie Hall tomorrow night, under auspices of the Independent Coalition of American Women, a pro-Landon organization.

Civic Leader Found Dead.
Birmingham, Ala., Sept. 30.—James G. Smith, 54, president of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, was found shot to death last night in his home. The body, discovered by a son-in-law, Lawrence Whitten, was lying on a bed, a pistol in one hand and a shotgun in the other. Surviving are the widow and two children.

It would seem to most persons that the Communists would be quite angry with Mr. Roosevelt—and would seek the election of Gov. Landon, who, according to Mr. Roosevelt, stands for a philosophy that breeds the conditions by which Communism becomes possible.

But that is not the fact. The Communists assert that it is essential Mr. Landon be defeated. It does not make sense—now, does it?

The Campaign Arena

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, Sept. 30.—President Franklin D. Roosevelt and Col. Frank Knox speak here tomorrow night in rival meetings half a dozen squares apart.

The Republican Vice Presidential candidate is scheduled to address a rally at the Duquesne Gardens from 8:15 to 9:45 p. m., and the President to talk at Forbes Field from 9 to 9:30 p. m.

Party leaders predicted 10,000 persons will pack the garden and more than 20,000 will go to Forbes Field, if weather conditions are favorable.

Gov. George H. Earle will talk at Forbes Field before the President. Immediately after the President's talk a speech by former Gov. Al Smith, of New York, will be broadcast from New York. It will be heard from loud speakers at the Republican rally.

Henry P. Fletcher, former chairman of the Republican National Committee and its general counsel, will be the principal speaker at the joint auspices of the national committee, the Landon and Knox Campaign Club and the Republican State Committee for the District of Columbia at the new Willard Hotel at 12:30 p. m. Tuesday.

Other addresses will be made by Ferry K. Heath, Washington representative of the National Finance Committee and former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and for a Nebraska, connected with Eastern headquarters of the national committee, and National Committee-man E. F. Colclough.

The purpose of the meeting is to raise Washington's quota of funds for the national committee and for the State committee for the District. A short screen film will be shown, entitled "Flowed Under."

New York, Sept. 30.—Stopping at Democratic committee headquarters, en route to Concord, N. H., where he will make the keynote address at a Democratic State convention tomorrow, Senator Millard E. Tydings, of Maryland, today asserted his State "absolutely was safe in the Roosevelt column."

Senator Tydings not only based this contention on results of the Baltimore Sun's all-inclusive poll of Maryland voters—which shows the President a 2-to-1 favorite—but also on his own observations around the State. He said these observations had convinced him the Sun poll was "as accurate a forecast of the election in my State as could be made."

The Marylander conferred with Democratic Chairman James A. Farley and Senator Joseph P. Guffey, of Pennsylvania, chairman of the senatorial campaign committee. Senator Guffey said he had hopes of another Democratic Senator being elected by New Hampshire this fall.

Lansing, Mich., Sept. 30 (AP)—Louis B. Ward, who was defeated by Representative Prentiss M. Brown for the Democratic nomination for United States Senator in the recent Michigan primary, withdrew today his petition for a recount.

Ward formerly was Father Charles E. Coughlin's Washington representative. He ran for the senatorial nomination with the indorsement of Father Coughlin's National Union for Social Justice. He demanded a recount when unofficial tabulations showed he had lost to Brown by about 4,000 votes, but withdrew his petition today after the official State canvass showed Brown's plurality to be 7,466 votes.

Baltimore, Sept. 30 (AP)—Gov. Alf M. Landon's percentage of the total vote in the Presidential poll conducted by the Baltimore Sun papers (Independent Democrats), among registered voters in Maryland today fell below the share Herbert Hoover received in the 1932 election. Landon had 35.94 per cent of the total 197,491 votes cast. In 1932, Hoover received 30.04 per cent of the total. Meanwhile, President Roosevelt's percentage of the total of the vote in the poll rose to 63.44. He received 61.50 per cent in 1932.

The vote for the major candidates in the poll stand:

Landon, 70,971; Roosevelt, 125,294; Thomas (Socialist), 710; Aiken (Labor), 146; Browder (Communist), 370.

There were 2,078 ballots marked for Lemke (Union Party candidate), although his name is not on the ballot.

Kansas City, Sept. 30 (AP)—At a meeting under Republican auspices, former Senator James C. Reed, Missouri Democrat, said last night "it's going to be pretty hard for some of us Democrats to vote the Republican ticket," but the World War period called for forgetting politics and "again we face a crisis."

Reed, who frequently has attacked President Roosevelt and his Administration, said that "unpopular as Hoover was in 1932 . . . if Mr. Roosevelt had told the people of the United States any one of ten things that he has since asserted, he would have been defeated in every State in the Union."

others. He would not permit the prisoners to converse with counsel. He said the five probably would be held "for 34 hours."

New York, Sept. 30 (AP)—The American Civil Liberties Union, which earlier had protested to Mayor Sam Beecher of Terre Haute against the arrest of the Communist Presidential candidate, Earl Browder, on a vagrancy charge, said it would file damage suits charging false arrest against the mayor and Chief of Police James C. Yates of Terre Haute.

Roger N. Baldwin, director of the Union, said "Mayor Beecher seems to think he has the right to decide what speakers shall and shall not be permitted in Terre Haute. We think that the courts will disagree with the mayor as to his powers."

William Z. Foster, chairman of the Communist campaign committee, issued a statement terming the arrest "a gross violation of constitutional rights" affecting "the civil rights of the entire American population."

"President Roosevelt and Gov. McNutt of Indiana must take immediate steps to prosecute the Terre Haute authorities," Foster added.

New York, Sept. 30 (AP)—Representative Vito Marcantonio (Republican), New York, today wired U. S. Attorney General Homer S. Cummings demanding prosecution of the chief of police, mayor and other officers who arrested the Communist Presidential candidate.

The arrest, he said, was a gross violation of free speech and the right to travel from one State into another.

2 Suits Assail AAA Milk Pact For Local Area

Twelve Maryland, Virginia Farmers Ask Injunction in District Court.

The constitutionality of the AAA milk marketing agreement, put into effect in the Washington area a week and a half ago, was attacked in District Supreme Court yesterday when milk producers filed two separate suits asking that Secretary Wallace be enjoined from enforcing the order.

Petitioners in the first suit were 11 Montgomery and Frederick County (Md.) milk producers, all under contract to the Highland Farms Dairy, a local distributing unit. The other suit was filed by A. Lawrence Leigh, of Vienna, Va. In both cases Chief Justice Alfred A. Whitely signed rules requiring Secretary Wallace to show cause by October 8 why preliminary injunctions should not be issued.

The Maryland farmers filed their suits through their attorneys, Sifton Darr and Louis I. Obergh, Leigh, the Virginia milk producer, was represented by Frederick Shohman and George A. Cassidy.

Forsee "Loss, Injury."

The attorneys claimed that if the order is carried out it will result in "irreparable loss and injury" to the plaintiffs, who have been selling milk for a flat price. The order directs distributors to pay for milk on a "basic and surplus" price plan. It also was argued that Congress has no authority to give the Secretary of Agriculture power to fix prices and that freedom of contract has been violated through the order.

Leigh's attorneys, in their argument, said the order caused price fluctuation and that their client was never sure of what his milk would bring. Arguments that the AAA violates due process of law, delegates authority illegally and is discriminatory also were brought before the court.

The Maryland farmers, none of whom belong to the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association, contend the order was adopted after approval only of the board of directors of the association, without having been submitted to a vote. The law requires approval of two-thirds of the producers in this area.

Oregon Is Facing New Fire Threat

Marshfield, Ore., Sept. 30 (AP). A sharp drop in humidity and a change in the wind raised new alarm tonight for a hazardous "fire bowl" of southwestern Oregon just as it appeared the major danger had passed.

The humidity dropped to 72 degrees from 100 in an hour and a slight north wind swung around into the northwest, a definitely more dangerous position.

The weather change had no immediate effect on fires burning in the 400,000-acre sector, but it carried many possibilities of danger to the surviving cities of Saturday's death-dealing blaze, which wiped out the town of Bond with a loss of at least 11 lives.

Mrs. Robinson had all her upper teeth broken and her jawbone shattered. Miss Noland, most seriously hurt, suffered a deep scalp laceration and, it is feared, skull injury. Robinson suffered facial injuries. Hazel Robinson suffered a back injury and possible concussion. The boy had a broken arm. All were given emergency treatment at a physician's office here. Robinson, who was driving, collided with a truck while trying to pass two other automobiles.

Debt 'Menacingly High,' McCarl Asks Reversal of Policy

'Deplorable State' of Nation's Finances Assailed by Former Comptroller General, Breaking Silence

By William V. Nealy.

John R. McCarl, who, as Comptroller General of the United States, spent 15 years putting legal brakes on the Nation's spending, last night assailed "the continuing wastes and extravagance by our Government," declared the public debt was "menacingly high," and called for "a complete reversal of the theory of administration that has sunk us so deep in debt."

Breaking the silence he has maintained since his retirement, required by law, June 15 from the Comptroller's office, the former cost-parer spoke on the Republican National Committee's radio period customarily devoted to the William Hard broadcasts.

Declaring that "no one should get a thrill from pointing to the fact that our national credit is impaired," he said he was beginning to fear "that our people are not fully awake to the seriousness of this menace." Then he launched into a recital of the "deplorable state" of the Nation's finances, a reminder that "we still have an army of unemployed—some ten millions"—and that the Government must spend for relief this year "at least two and a half billion dollars . . . more than we will collect this year from income taxes and a billion dollars more than we actually collected as income taxes last year."

Debt at Safety Limit, He Declares.

Pointing to the fact that the "admitted" deficit this year would be at least $2,100,000,000, he declared: "While it is possible that, notwithstanding these things, the Administration has such influence over our banks that they can be induced for a time, at least, to loan it more money—we simply cannot keep on borrowing and spending. With stability of government, our debt is now all that it may be, with safety."

He said the public debt was now, "well over" $34,000,000,000 and still going up, and warned that it would seem wise to expect it would go to at least $38,000,000,000 "before anything can be done about it." The opinion was expressed in his speech that "at the rate money is being rushed out for spending, from relief appropriations, further large appropriations would be required to care for the needs during the coming winter." Then, pointing to the excess of expenditures over income, McCarl asked: "Is there a substantial citizen, or any group of like citizens, so sanguine of our 'good credit' standing as to be willing to underwrite a Government issue of half a billion dollars—twenty-year paper, at current interest rates—for sale exclusively to private investors?"

"Unpleasant" Interest Costs Recalled.

Even assuming that such a loan could be floated, he asked whether the country could afford to continue borrowing, and, following up the question, dealt with the "unpleasant" item of interest costs, which he likened to "paying for a dead horse."

"Even at our present abnormally low interest rate," the country's first Comptroller declared, "our interest costs are now nearly $900,000,000 a year and will probably go to a full $1,000,000,000 a year before we can substantially curtail our debt."

"Think of it—paying a billion dollars a year just as interest—paying a billion dollars a year out of our taxes before there is a single dollar available for curtailments, or a copper cent to take care of other Government costs, now amounting to nearly $7,000,000,000 a year."

Cheap money will not always be available for the Government borrowings, McCarl said, adding that "interest rates are low because the Government is the only large borrower." Once "the threat that has harassed industry since early 1933" is removed, he warned that industry would need money and "will be willing to pay a reasonable rate of interest for it," causing an advance in the price the Government must pay on its loans.

He emphasized throughout his talk his doubt that the country could afford to continue paying such huge sums to carry its public debt.

"It is an expensive luxury, this public debt," he warned, "and rather than enlarge it we must plan to reduce it."

A picture of "some new catastrophe, some horrible event requiring us to raise large amounts of money, and quickly," was painted by McCarl to stress the handicap he said the present public debt would be in an emergency, and he insisted that "with unrest menacing the world we would be foolish to burrow our heads into the sand."

Aside from such emergency, however, he dwelt on the "serious" effect of the interest load on industry and unemployment.

"It means high taxes," he said. "Exorbitant taxes—such a taking away of income for taxes as to hamper industry in moving forward—in creating jobs. We must remember that industry does not move forward just to create jobs—just to give employment. A particular business moves forward by employing such numbers of persons working together—co-operating under good leadership and using invested capital—will produce such return, such earnings, as will provide fair remuneration for all—good wages, and reasonable return on employed capital. When, from such earnings, too much is required for taxes something unfortunate always happens—a cut in wages—or no wages at all—force reductions—loss of jobs. Industry simply cannot function in job-giving when its earnings are confiscated for taxes."

The threat of inflation was seen and its effect pictured by McCarl the disastrous to those of small fixed income.

"Worst of all," he warned, "if continuing wastes and extravagance by our Government should force further inflation, it will be those of low income who will suffer most. Of what value will reasonable wages be if prices for necessities should double or treble? That is what happens when the Government begins pouring out 'printing-press' money. Money becomes cheap and prices go up. The wage earner is the goat. He is usually ruined before he can manage to have his wages adjusted upward—and wages adjustments upward never keep pace with advancing prices. The menace of further inflation, in any form, must be avoided."

A three-fold program to care for all essential regular and emergency functions of the Government without plunging the country further into debt was outlined.

"We must care for our unemployed and needy," the speaker concluded, "until industry can revive on such basis of confidence as to come to the rescue by providing jobs for all—we must assist agriculture, and we must keep all essential functions of Government operating efficiently—but we must do it without further increasing our debt and interest burden—and we can do it. We can do it by (first) promptly removing the threat that is harassing legitimate industry—so industry can move forward—give jobs—and thus begin promptly reducing our relief costs; (second) by eliminating all waste and extravagance in Government; removing all politics from relief; ridding the country of the costly Santa Claus system; and cutting appropriations down to essential requirements; and (third) by an almost complete reversal of the theory of administration that has sunk us so deep in debt—by displacing these visionary and experimental methods now so prevalent in Washington, by methods demonstrated by experience to be safest and best, under trying conditions."

Administration Wasteful, Says G. O. P. Speaker

Roosevelt Has Support of Communists, Declares Campbell.

Attacking President Roosevelt's speech in Syracuse, N. Y., Tuesday, former Representative Phillip Campbell, of Kansas, last night addressed a rally meeting of Republicans, sponsored by the Landon-Le Gore Club of Montgomery County, in the Takoma Park Fire-house.

"Mr. Roosevelt has discovered the people of this country will have nothing to do with communism," he declared. "Whether he wants the support of the Communists or not, he has it."

He characterized the present Administration as "wasteful" and the present Congress as "spineless." "It has passed unconstitutional laws," he wrote by Tugwell and Frankfurter," said Campbell, "laws which are alien to the Constitution and all liberty. The President seeks power to regulate every phase of the people's lives."

Campbell accused the Administration of "buying votes with bread," and predicted unemployment would increase should Roosevelt be re-elected.

Harry W. Le Gore, State Senator from Frederick County, who is a candidate for Congress from the Sixth Maryland District, against Representative David J. Lewis, scored the "Democratic radicalism" of his opponent.

"It would seem fair to the constituents to which Representative Lewis appeals for support that he be frank and tell them when he became a Democratic radical," said Le Gore.

Other speakers were Mrs. Walter B. Tuckerman, president of the Montgomery County Federation of Republican Women, and Walter W. Dawson, chairman of the Republican State Central Committee of Montgomery County.

Kennedy Visits His Son, Hurt in College Football

Boston, Sept. 30 (AP)—Joseph P. Kennedy, ardent supporter of President Roosevelt and former head of the Federal Securities and Exchange Commission, today remained with his son, Joseph P. Jr., a patient in Phillips Hospital, against General Hospital.

Kennedy flew here yesterday to be with his boy who was a leading contender for an end position on the Harvard varsity until injuries put him out of competition.

The youth suffered a leg injury some months ago. In a recent scrimmage he broke several ribs and fractured a knee.

Robbers Steal $25,000 In Jewels From Truck

Indianapolis, Sept. 30 (AP)—Three men in a robbery, apparently carefully planned, obtained $25,000 worth of jewels early today from a truck consigned to a salesman for a New York jewelry firm.

The trio captured Kenneth Grant, colored driver for a transfer company, as he left the Union Station and forced him to drive to the outskirts of the city. After rifling the trunk the three robbers fled in a car that had trailed the truck.

Boland Asks Release on Basis Of Mrs. Lyddane's Acquittal

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Sept. 30.—John Martin Boland, claiming that the acquittal of Anne M. Lyddane on a murder conspiracy indictment automatically made his conviction on a joint indictment invalid, petitioned a Baltimore city court for writ of habeas corpus today.

Boland was convicted in Montgomery County in the summer of 1935 of conspiring to murder Francis Lyddane, the husband of Mrs. Lyddane. He was sentenced to three years and nine months.

Mrs. Lyddane was indicted jointly with him for the same offense, but won a separate trial and a change of venue. She was tried in May, this year, at Hagerstown and acquitted. James Pugh, Montgomery County's State attorney, said then he would ask a pardon for Boland on the ground that if Mrs. Lyddane was not guilty, the man was also innocent and that the conviction was done toward freeing Boland.

Boland filed his petition through Leon A. Rubenstein, attorney. Judge Eugene O'Dunne set next Monday for a hearing.

Practically the same case was presented against Boland and against Mrs. Lyddane. Witnesses testified that the woman, secretary to a bank president and active in politics, sought to have Boland kill her husband.

Boland's petition said that his conviction became void when the woman was acquitted. He also pointed out that charges against another man, indicted in the same case, had been nolle prossed.

sponsors are and now concerned with its successful administration," it said. "Suggestions that the act may be improved in certain directions involve no criticism of its fundamental purposes and principles."

"At Milwaukee, Landon demanded repeal of the old-age insurance provisions and said the Republican Party proposed to overhaul the old age assistance section of the act."

(In a radio address last night, John G. Winant, three times Republican Governor of New Hampshire, said the act was "beyond the Social Security Board, said the call to retreat is written large" in the Republican position. He said he had hoped that "we might as Americans—and not as Republicans and Democrats—put the program into effect, discover and amend its shortcomings.")

Five cases involving constitutionality of the Wagner labor relations act were appealed yesterday to the Supreme Court by the National Labor Relations Board.

Two cases involving the act already were before the court. They were filed by the Associated Press and by the Bradley Lumber Co., of Arkansas.

The new cases had to do with the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation, and two cases pertaining to the Freuhauf Trailer Co., of Canton, Ohio, and two cases involving Freedman-Harry Marks Clothing Co., of New York. The labor board lost all five in the lower courts.

In the Jones & Laughlin dispute, the board's petition said the Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans held that the application of the legislation was "beyond the power of Congress under the commerce clause of the Constitution."

Sought to Avoid Politics.

"This was done deliberately to prevent its recommendations from being made a partisan political issue in the present campaign."

Landon came to his office in the morning, but remained home after lunch to hear the broadcast of baseball's World Series in New York. When he received reporters, the candidate was busy signing State documents.

The Governor's office announced today Landon will speak in Detroit October 13 instead of October 14, as scheduled originally for his next Midwest tour. The change was made, said, because of auditorium facilities.

In analyzing the security law, the research document said many of its defects "were the result of hasty and ill-considered amendments."

serious threat to the life of the government.

Premier Blum, warning Parliament that further delay in enacting the measure would be dangerous to the country's internal order and embarrassing to its international relations, intimated he would throw the administration's fate into the balance if it were necessary to end the dispute.

The night of hectic debate showed the government held only a perilous and partially assented majority in the Senate, but that the Chamber continues to back Blum strongly.

The devaluation measure will go back to the Senate finance committee later this morning. The committee has the choice of drafting a compromise bill or submitting the project as passed by the Chamber to the Senate for a second vote.

Germany to Stand Fast.

Berlin, Sept. 30 (AP)—Germany refuses to be stampeded into devaluation, in the tidal wave of the world's troubled money markets. It was emphasized tonight in authoritative quarters.

The Third Reich, however, will not cling stubbornly to its present gold parity. It was made clear, if "genuine" international stabilization can be achieved through negotiations.

"If such a possibility should grow out of the initiative of the three powers," said Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, Reichsminister of economics, referring to the financial "triple alliance" of the United States, Great Britain and France, "then we should welcome it and be ready for a new examination of the situation."

Meanwhile, he said, Germany will stand pat on her present currency policy.

WHAT YOU SHOULD KNOW ABOUT FACE PIMPLES

These disgusting little spots often result from a slight, temporary disturbance, or merely from incorrect cleansing, or sometimes they are more persistent due to deeper internal causes.

While properly treating the underlying cause, you can relieve the itchy, burning, soreness and help your skin by using an ointment that will keep the medication in contact with the pimply spots. Apply it every night and leave it on all night. It does a world of good.

For more than 40 years people have used Resinol Ointment to fill this need. It soothes the irritation and aids healing. It also treats the oil pores where many surface pimples start, washing first with Resinol Soap quickens the pleasing results.

serious threat to the life of the government.

Premier Blum, warning Parliament that further delay in enacting the measure would be dangerous to the country's internal order and embarrassing to its international relations, intimated he would throw the administration's fate into the balance if it were necessary to end the dispute.

The night of hectic debate showed the government held only a perilous and partially assented majority in the Senate, but that the Chamber continues to back Blum strongly.

The devaluation measure will go back to the Senate finance committee later this morning. The committee has the choice of drafting a compromise bill or submitting the project as passed by the Chamber to the Senate for a second vote.

Germany to Stand Fast.

Berlin, Sept. 30 (AP)—Germany refuses to be stampeded into devaluation, in the tidal wave of the world's troubled money markets. It was emphasized tonight in authoritative quarters.

The Third Reich, however, will not cling stubbornly to its present gold parity. It was made clear, if "genuine" international stabilization can be achieved through negotiations.

"If such a possibility should grow

out of the initiative of the three powers," said Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, Reichsminister of economics, referring to the financial "triple alliance" of the United States, Great Britain and France, "then we should welcome it and be ready for a new examination of the situation."

Meanwhile, he said, Germany will stand pat on her present currency policy.

War Debt Action Denied.

Paris, Sept. 30 (AP)—William C. Bullitt, arriving to take his post as ambassador to Paris, denied today reports there have been new negotiations for settlement of France's debt to the United States.

Davis Brands Keystone State Relief Football

Senator Demands Inquiry as Committee Meets; WPA Welcomes It.

By the Associated Press.
Backing up his demand for an investigation of politics in the administration of the WPA in Pennsylvania, Senator Davis (Republican), of Pennsylvania, yesterday sent to the Senate Campaign Funds Committee a letter saying relief in that State "is still being kicked around as a political football."

The committee already was meeting on the Pennsylvania situation when Davis made his letter public. Edward N. Jones, WPA administrator for the Keystone State, was called into executive session for questioning.

Jones told reporters he was "perfectly willing" to have an open hearing of the charges concerning WPA in the Philadelphia and Allegheny County districts, he said, there are 8,495 WPA administrative workers, of which 59 per cent are listed as Democrats and 41 per cent either Republicans or unregistered.

Check-up Plan Dropped.
Asked if any effort had been made to list relief workers themselves, he said such a move was inaugurated several months ago and abandoned when an order was issued cutting the number of relief workers from 250,000 to 250,000.

"Had we gone on with the plan then," said Jones, "we would have been accused of listing the parties to which the workers belonged in order to drop the Republicans."

Complaints of "disgruntled workers," Jones told the committee, are referred to the WPA investigating service.

Inquiry Welcomed.
While the committee still was in executive session, an aid made public an announcement from Chairman Longenecker (Democrat), Connecticut, that "the Democrats will welcome an investigation of Republican charges of coercion and intimidation in Pennsylvania."

Davis, who appeared before the committee Monday, demanded in his letter to the committee that Harry L. Hopkins, WPA administrator, furnish the names, addresses and salaries of all administrative employees in the WPA in Pennsylvania.

He added that "rumor has it that there are more bosses, foremen and administrative officials under WPA in Allegheny County than are required to service any one of the largest industrial firms in the State of Pennsylvania."

"Slush Fund" Charged.
Harrisburg, Pa., Sept. 30 (AP).—David L. Lawrence, Democratic State chairman, tonight charged Pennsylvania Republican leaders were "trying to raise a $5,000,000 slush fund for use at the polls on election day in an effort to defeat Roosevelt in Pennsylvania."

Lawrence added that he reported the matter to Senator Longenecker, of the Senate Committee Investigating Campaign Expenditures.

"This money is being collected by Joseph R. Grundy, chairman of the board of the Pennsylvania Manufacturers' Association, in a series of personal visits at meetings of industrialists throughout the State," the statement said.

"Last night, Grundy, together with Joseph N. Pew, Jr., head of the Sun Oil Co.; Ernest Poole, president of the State Chamber of Commerce, and an official of the Carpenter Steel Co., of Reading; Jay Cooke, Philadelphia banker, and Senator G. Mason Owlett, who is Ernest T. Weir's personal representative on the Republican National Committee, met with a group of Berks County business men in Rajah Temple, Reading."

"Grundy told these men that unless they raised $500,000 for Berks County's share of the Republican campaign slush fund, it will be just too bad for all of us." The meeting was held behind closed doors with three men on guard to identify those who were admitted.

Flooded Brazos Menaces Southern Texas Plains
Hearne, Tex., Sept. 30 (AP).—Flood waters of the destructive Brazos River pushed deep into south Texas today, menacing the Gulf Coast plains region.

At Valley Junction, below the confluence of the rain-swollen Little River and the Brazos, the river stage rose about 4.4 feet, spilling over onto farm lands and drowning numerous cattle.

Losses were roughly figured at millions of dollars. Thousands of acres of bottom land have been inundated up and down the river and its tributaries since they went on a week-end rampage. There was no loss of life reported.

Utilities Sale Is Held Likely To Be Rejected

Refusal of D. C. Concern to Permit P. U. C. to Adjust Price Called Factor.

While the Public Utilities Commission yesterday awaited briefs and a copy of an agreement governing the sale of securities in the Washington Gas Light Co., indications were that the application of the company to buy two suburban plants from the parent holding company would be denied.

The Washington company had asked authority to purchase the Alexandria Gas Co. and the Washington Suburban Co. of Hyattsville, from Washington & Suburban Companies, for $1,375,000.

Following a two-day hearing, members of the commission declined to predict what action they might take, but observers believed the decision would be negative.

The determining factors in the case, it was believed, were the refusal of the gas company to permit the commission to adjust the price and the testimony of Byers McK. Bachman, chief accountant of the commission, that the deal might impose a financial burden on the local company. Officials of the company insisted the investment would prove profitable from the beginning.

What effect a rejection of the application may have on the proposed sale of the controlling stock in the Washington & Suburban Companies is not known, but the holding company, it is understood, of necessity will continue with its dissolution plan on account of the public utility act passed by the last Congress.

Testimony at the hearing was that a spokesman for Dominick & Dominick, New York brokers and principal underwriters for the proposed sale of stock, had indicated his firm would not handle the deal unless the Washington company bought the Alexandria and Hyattsville plants.

Soaring Society Event Canceled This Year
The annual expedition of the National Soaring Society to Big Meadows, Va., will not be held this year, it was announced yesterday by Don Hamilton, who has sponsored the event in the past.

Hamilton said most of those who have taken part were students and that the expedition, heretofore held in late September or early October, interfered with classes. He added the expedition might be brought to Big Meadows in the future.

Roosevelt Gives Winant Release From U. S. Post

Regrets 'Political Passions' That Caused Resignation of Security Head.

Regretting that "the evanescent passions of a political campaign have fanned the flames of partisan hostility to this nonpartisan legislation," the President last night accepted the resignation of John G. Winant as chairman of the Social Security Board.

Winant, who resigned his post Monday night in order to reply as a private citizen to the criticisms of the New Deal social security plan by Gov. Alf M. Landon, Republican Presidential nominee, appeared at the White House late yesterday.

After a conference with the President, a letter dictated by Mr. Roosevelt was released. It follows:

"Dear Gov. Winant:

Your letter tendering your resignation as a member of the Social Security Board greatly distresses me. You are, of course, right in regarding the social security act as 'America's answer' to the 'great human need' of effective social machinery for meeting the problems of dependency and unemployment."

"Like you, also, I have never assumed that the social security act was without fault. I had assumed and even hoped that time and experience might dictate many and important changes."

"The act was conceived and passed by the Congress as a humanitarian measure. Its passage transcended party lines. The opposition in both houses was, practically speaking, negligible. I share your regret that the campaign have fanned the flames of partisan hostility to this nonpartisan legislation."

"Equally right are you in recognizing the intention of Congress to create a nonpartisan board, with personnel protected under civil service, and to insure nonpartisan administration of the act. Your appointment was intended to insure that it would be so administered. And, as you state, it has been so administered."

"Under such conditions I should have thought that you might have felt free to correct any misconception of the purpose of the legislation or any misinterpretation of its details. Appropriate education of the public mind regarding public measures is one of the inherent duties of an administrator.

"For that reason I have hesitated to accept your resignation. I did not wish to lose the benefit of your devoted and disinterested service in the administration of the social security program. Yet, upon reflection and after talking with you, I have come to appreciate your position and the sense of public duty which impelled your resignation and your wish to be free as a citizen, not simply to clear up misconceptions and misinterpretations of the act, but actively to defend the 'constructive provisions' of the act and to oppose spurious substitutes.

"For that reason I have hesitated to accept your resignation. I did not wish to lose the benefit of your devoted and disinterested service in the administration of the social security program. Yet, upon reflection and after talking with you, I have come to appreciate your position and the sense of public duty which impelled your resignation and your wish to be free as a citizen, not simply to clear up misconceptions and misinterpretations of the act, but actively to defend the 'constructive provisions' of the act and to oppose spurious substitutes.

Sacco-Vanzetti Pamphlet Case Is Revived Here

Alumni Charge Harvard Heads Destroyed Mail Attacking Lowell.

By the Associated Press.
Cambridge, Mass., Sept. 30.—The Sacco-Vanzetti case was revived briefly today when three of the 28 alumni who dragged the executed men's ghosts into Harvard's recent tercentenary celebration charged in Washington that Harvard authorities ordered destroyed pamphlets they said were mailed to Harvard's guests.

Harvard officials said that all mail not delivered during the celebration had been forwarded.

They declined further comment. The pamphlet in question, entitled, "Walled in This Tomb," concerned the celebrated trial of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti for the slaying of a South Braintree paymaster. The booklet assailed President-Emeritus A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard.

Lowell headed a special commission appointed by the then Gov. Alvan T. Fuller to investigate the evidence. The committee found the pair "guilty beyond a reasonable doubt."

The pamphlet called upon the alumni to "examine the mental processes" of President Lowell. It was prepared by 28 widely known alumni.

Former Gov. Fuller characterized the men as "damned fools," saying evidence was conclusive.

Yesterday three of the 28 alumni in Washington presented to Karl A. Crowley, postoffice solicitor, newspaper reports that the pamphlets were destroyed on orders of Harvard authorities.

The three were Varian Fry, editor of the Living Age; Quincy Howe, an editor and publisher; and Gardner Jackson, an official of an organization sponsoring formation of farmers' unions in the South.

Others who prepared the pamphlet with the three protesters included Heywood Brown, newspaper columnist; Charles Ansoff, former editor of the American Mercury; Stuart Chase, economist and author; and George Biddle, Philadelphia artist.

State to Fight Shift of Venue In Maxwell Case

Attorney to Oppose Move, Says Defendant Has Backers in Wise.

By the Associated Press.
Jonesville, Va., Sept. 30.—Commonwealth's Attorney Fred B. Greer of Wise County, said here today he would oppose any move on the part of attorneys for Edith Maxwell for a change of venue before retrial on a charge of slaying her father.

"Edith has plenty of friends and sympathy in Wise County," he said, "and I see no reason for a change of venue."

He said he considered it doubtful if Circuit Judge H. A. Skeen, who recently admitted Miss Maxwell to freedom under bond, would consent to a change.

The 22-year-old former Wise County school teacher was convicted last November of murdering Trigg Maxwell at Pound, Va., and sentenced to 25 years' imprisonment. The State Supreme Court awarded her a new trial.

Funds for Fight Needed

Edith Maxwell is free on bail after 14 months in jail, following sentence of 25 years in prison on the charge of murdering her father. With the aid of money given by its subscribers, The Washington Post has won half the battle in obtaining justice for this girl.

Miss Maxwell again must face the court, and there must be an acquittal before she is free to resume life as a country school teacher.

The fund subscribed to by readers of The Washington Post is nearly exhausted. All the legal expenses of the appeal to the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals were paid out of this fund. Charles Henry Smith, noted attorney of Alexandria, Va., gave his services without fee, to assist The Post in its fight in behalf of Miss Maxwell.

A new fund of $1,000 is necessary to conduct the new trial, set for November 16, when a change of venue will be asked by Smith from Wise County.

Inclosed find, . . . as a contribution to the Edith Maxwell Defense Fund to be used by The Washington Post in her retrial.

District Deed Recorder Saved From Eviction When His Stony-Hearted Landlord Relents

Life is bright once more for William J. Tompkins, who, with his staff of 65, records the deeds for the District.

Last week he was the unwilling subject of an old-fashioned melodrama when the bad landlord threatened eviction if the rent was not paid. "I cannot pay more," Tompkins had argued. "Congress has only appropriated $12,000 for this year. You should have asked for the increase before the District bill went through."

But the landlord was adamant. Through an attorney—Col. Julius L. Feyser—he said, in effect: "We must increase the rent ante to $13,000 for the fiscal year '37. Noncompliance will lead us to institute possession proceedings in the Municipal Court."

His Pleas Rejected.
It was a desperate Tompkins who finally called on Acting Controller General Richard N. Elliott for relief. But to his deepest cries for succor that Treasury watchdog replied: "We cannot aid you. Furthermore, no rental increase is allowable. If you heed the landlord's demands you will be put in jail."

The General Accounting Office then quoted a prohibition incorporating a clause that "any person violating any provision of this section shall be summarily removed from office and may also be punished by fine of not less than $100 or imprisonment for not less than one month." It also pointed out that any contract attempting to impose an obligation in excess of the amount appropriated imposed no legal obligation.

An Added Dilemma.
That momentous decision was rendered September 21. It was a new bill of rights for harried tenants but it was an added dilemma for Tompkins. Where to move was the burning question. Besides, he had an old attachment for the building. Located at 412 Fifth street northwest, it is the oldest steel and concrete structure in the District.

Came the dawn. Like a bolt from the blue the landlord changed his mind. And with a new lease in his hand Tompkins dismounted from the horns of the dilemma.

Suspect Admits Extortion Plot On 7 Notables

$64,000 Was Sought From Sinclair, Six Others, New Yorker Says.

By the Associated Press.
New York, Sept. 30.—J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, tonight announced the arrest of an unemployed acrobat on charges of attempting to extort a total of $64,000 from Harry Sinclair, the oil man, and six other prominent men and women.

The man is Frank Vitolo, 33, of Yonkers, N. Y., who was taken into custody at Yonkers late today and brought to the Federal Building here where, Hoover said, he made a confession.

Hoover said Vitolo would be prosecuted on a charge of violating the Federal extortion law by writing threatening letters to Sinclair at his Great Neck, N. Y., home; to Col. Douglas I. McKay, president of the New York Title Insurance Co.; Mrs. Alexander Hamilton Rice, of Newport, R. I., wife of the explorer and philanthropist; and to Mrs. Bernard E. Smith, of Bedford Village, N. Y., wife of a wealthy New York broker.

The bureau head announced Sinclair received two anonymous threatening communications postmarked August 10 and August 12, last. The latter communication contained a demand for $10,000 which was to be delivered on the night of August 16, by Sinclair's chauffeur. Hoover said the alleged extortionist did not appear to obtain the sum demanded.

Hoover said Vitolo wrote, in addition, an extortion letter to Mrs. Robert H. Montgomery, of Cutler road, Miami, Fla., but said that charge would not be pressed against him.

The Federal director quoted Vitolo as telling him the "wild scheme had been concocted from information obtained from a detective magazine."

Russia Heeds Jesus' Teachings, Ex-Pastor Asserts at Rally Here

There is complete religious freedom in Russia today, Dr. Fred W. Ingvaldstad, former pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, told 60 Friends of the Soviet Union at Typographical Temple last night.

In a lecture, entitled "Crosses Over the Kremlin," he said that the atheism in Russia is merely an expression of hatred for the wealth, oppression and superstition of the old Russian Church.

"Right now," he added, "the social program of the Soviet Union is infinitely more in keeping with the teachings of Jesus than that of any so-called Christian nation on earth."

On the ruins of the old church, he said, is springing up a new one called the Living Church, which accepts as its primary creed the ethical teachings of Christ. It is gaining 100,000 members every month. He quoted Archbishop Alexander Vedensky, its head, as saying:

"Is a so-called land of atheism without lynching, without racial prejudice and without economic oppression any worse than the so-called Christian nations which have these things?"

Dr. Ingvaldstad said it was impossible to understand Russia without understanding its youth. He called them the "sons and daughters of the Russian Revolution."

Roll Call Drive Reports Cheer Red Cross Aids

Enrollments of Members Reach 2,559 in Spite of Bad Weather.

Encouraging reports last night began to reach Red Cross campaign headquarters here in its annual Roll Call, with a membership total at the end of the day of 2,559, despite inclement weather which hampered solicitors and forced a second postponement of night scheduled by the Thirty-sixth Pursuit Squadron of the Army Air Corps.

One of the first 100 per cent enrollment reports came yesterday from the office of Elwood Seal, District corporation counsel, who reported through R. T. D. Camaller, vice chairman of the professional unit, that his entire staff had responded to the invitation to join Chairman of the professional unit is Dr. A. C. Christie.

Volunteers in the apartment house division, under Miss Elizabeth Wightman, and the small shop unit, headed by Mrs. Fanny B. Ingram, worked through most of the day, despite the rain.

Returns from financial institutions, real estate and insurance companies are farther advanced than they were at a corresponding date last year, Lloyd B. Wilson, campaign chairman, announced. Increasing returns are expected from the Government division, headed by Brig. Gen. Fred Boschen, within the next few days.

Enrollment in the Government divisions still leads all other divisions.

Among concerns from which returns came in yesterday were C. M. Murphy Co., National Advisory Commission, Anacostia Bank, Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., Friendship Branch of the Riggs National Bank, Department of Agriculture, Security Savings Bank, E. A. Pierce & Co., Demoneys, Inc., Glascock, Downing & Seebold, Wire, Rope & Strand Association, Randall Prep School, Arcade Laundry, Riggs Bank, Shoreham Hotel, Wardman Park Hotel, LaSalle Apartments, and Societa, Vittorio Emanuele II.

Meanwhile John Saul, chairman of the general business committee of the roll call drive, reviewed the activities of the District chapter last night, and pleaded for wholehearted co-operation with the campaign throughout the Capital.

"Chapter volunteers made over 13,000 garments, including 100 layettes and 80,000 surgical dressings, which were sent to Washington hospitals and local relief agencies. The chapter produced 200 braille books for the blind; it trained over 2,700 men and women and children in the principles of life saving," said Saul.

"It gave to 1,200 others training in emergency first aid; women and girls in more than 180 families were trained in home hygiene and care of the sick; thousands of war veterans were assisted through the chapter motor transportation. Christmas bags, home visits and providing assistance with Government claims."

Trade Balances Is Unfavorable For 8th Month

U. S. Imports for August Exceed Exports by $16,767,000.

For the eighth successive month, the United States in August continued to purchase more goods from the world than it sent out of the country in exports, the Commerce Department reported yesterday.

An unfavorable trade balance of $16,767,000 for the eight-month period was announced by Secretary of Commerce Daniel Roper, who noted at the same time that "our foreign trade is increasing substantially."

The United States sold $178,249,000 in goods abroad in August, but imported in the same month $195,016,000 from other nations, an adverse monthly trade balance of $16,767,000.

Should this trade trend continue for the remaining four months of this year, it would bring the United States its first yearly unfavorable trade balance since 1933, Commerce Department officials point out that October, November and December, when cotton starts moving abroad, are usually big months for exports.

The Commerce Department yesterday broke a precedent in announcing only the total trade figures for August, offering no substantiating data. It was announced that the commodities that made up the trade movement, and details of items imported and exported, will be made public today.

Dependent on Other Nations.

Past monthly unfavorable trade balances have shown the United States growing increasingly dependent on other nations for food supplies. Drought inroads on this country's important food crops may reflect itself even more in later figures. It was indicated that the 1934 drought and crop curtailments in total volume of October trade. August figures showed a 6.7 per cent gain over August, 1935. The bulk of the trade increase was reflected in imports. While August exports increased $6,123,000 over the same month a year ago, imports increased $25,946,000, an analysis of the trade totals showed. In the eight-month period exports increased $141,264,000, but imports were swollen by $212,210,000.

Orchestra Opens Box Office Today

The National Symphony Orchestra Association will open its downtown box office today making available to the public season tickets for the orchestra's sixth season of concerts, which will begin in Constitution Hall. The box office is located on the main floor of the Julius Garfinckel & Co. store, Fourteenth and F streets northwest.

Already an unprecedented number of advance reservations for season tickets have been received. C. C. Cappel, manager of the orchestra, said, and he predicted the sale of season tickets this fall will be far in excess of any previous year.

The growing popularity of the orchestra, the distinguished soloists engaged to appear with the orchestra, and plans for other special features will make the 1936-37 season the best in the orchestra's five-year history, according to Hans Kindler, its conductor. Because of the great number of outstanding soloists on this list it has been found necessary to increase the price of single admission tickets, Cappel announced. The season tickets which go on sale today are priced the same as last year.

Bedspring That Made an Architect's Dream Come True

Capt. Charles J. Rose, who fought with Sheridan at Winchester, brought this bedspread to Washington. More than 90 years ago his great-uncle, James Hogan, brought the spread here to illustrate his plans for design of an annex to the Capitol. Displaying it are Stella Yoonie Davis and Nannette Foster.

Bedspring, Shown Here, Won Job for Capitol Architect

Capt. Rose, 93, Returns to Washington; Tells of How President Harrison Unfurled 'Coverlid' Before Congressional Committee.

A red, white and blue bedspread, made a century ago to dramatize an architect's plans for the Capitol Annex, came back to Washington last week with Capt. Charles J. Rose, 93-year-old former Union Army cavalryman.

Rose, staying here for a few days at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Davis at 1845 Monroe street northwest, told the history of the "coverlid" yesterday. It was made, he said, by his grandmother, Mrs. Mary Margaret Rose, and brought to Washington by his great-uncle, James Hogan, when designs for the Capitol Annex were asked for by Congress.

The story of the spread, as Rose tells it, is the saga of a backwoods carpenter who dreamed of designing governmental halls and of his sister who brought his dream to fruition.

Born in Ireland.

Here is the story: James Hogan was born in Ireland, where he served his apprenticeship as a carpenter. He then came to this country, settling in Roseville, Ohio, where his sister, Mrs. Mary Margaret Hogan Rose, was living. In that primitive settlement, Hogan's yearning to construct stately mansions had to be satisfied with building barns and log cabins. But his ambition and ability were still with him, awaiting only on opportunity.

Eventually word came to Roseville that Congress was considering adding an annex to the Capitol. Hogan confided to his sister that he would like to design the building. He ended on a note of despair. What chance would he have, he asked, against the well-known architects of the East?

Mrs. Rose was not one to give up easily. For two years she worked, selecting the best wool from the best sheep, then dying it and spinning it into thread. She spent every evening at her hand loom, weaving the coverlid in the flickering light of a stone jar containing bear's grease and a cotton wick.

At last the task was completed—just as Gen. William Henry Harrison, the hero of Tippecanoe, was about to depart for Washington to be inaugurated as President. With him when he set out on the long, horseback trip was James Hogan, carrying his drawings for the Capitol annex and coverlid.

When the Congressional committee met to choose the best of the plans submitted, Gen. Harrison himself unfurled the coverlid.

The Congressmen, who had prepared themselves for an examination of black and white drawings, were startled by this thing in patriotic colors. They saw on the coverlid 24 reproductions of the Capitol as it would look when completed. Under each reproduction were the figures "1846"—the year in which it was expected the job would be finished.

Impressed with the workmanship, the Congressmen finally chose Hogan's design. He stayed here to superintend the construction, sending the coverlid back to Roseville.

A few years later his sister gave the coverlid to her eldest son, Ed-

Elk Herd Massacre By Stampede Over Utah Cliff Bared

By the Associated Press. Salt Lake City, Sept. 30.—A massacre of elk by stampeding them over a cliff—an official said it was kept secret for months by fear "guerrilla warfare might crop up against the killers"—came to light today with announcement seven men suspected of the crime are to be ordered before a Federal grand jury.

Evidence will include motion pictures of 31 dead elk, their crushed bodies in a pile at the bottom of an 800-foot cliff. United States Forest Service officials said.

Seven stockmen, according to State Game Commissioner Newell B. Cook, will be charged with deliberately stampeding the animals last December over the cliff on North Horn Mountain in Emery County, in wild south central Utah.

Elk which did not leap to their death were ruthlessly shot at the top of the cliff and their bodies left to rot, Cook asserted.

Sir George Paish Weds Anita Carolyn Rettig

London, Sept. 30 (AP)—Sir George Paish, British economist, and Mrs. Anita Carolyn House Rettig, an American lecturer on dietetics, whom he met in Chicago on a speaking tour, were married today.

Sir George Paish came to the United States in 1914 on a government mission. He was then adviser to the chancellor of the exchequer and the British treasury on financial and economic matters.

He sold, too, of sleeping under the dome of the same Capitol in which his family had had so prominent a part. That was early in 1884, he said, and he hadn't eaten for three days. He awoke after a night spent "on the soft side of the marble steps" and smelled coffee brewing in a coffee house on Pennsylvania avenue. He went after it. As he was hastening toward the aroma a tall, gaunt man stopped him and made him promise to write his mother regularly.

"I asked him who he was," said Rose, "and he answered, 'I am Abraham Lincoln.'"

The captain, who went to Miami 46 years ago to recover from war wounds, won his captaincy by drilling volunteers for the Spanish-American War.

"The coverlid, which he termed 'a coverlid of national importance,' will remain in his possession as long as he lives. He took it to the Smithsonian, he said, 'just to show them something they'd never seen before.' He doesn't intend to leave it to the institution, however."

U. S. Chamber Places Money Issue on List

Treasury Policy Foremost Topic Before Meeting of Board Tomorrow.

Monetary stabilization topped a list of subjects which the Chamber of Commerce of the United States said yesterday probably would be discussed by its board of directors at a meeting here tomorrow and Saturday.

"Discussion of monetary policy probably will center upon the present European situation and the relationship of the United States thereto," it added in a statement. "Later it is planned to have ready a committee report, carrying suggestions for legislation to take the place of monetary laws expiring at the end of January."

Among the laws which will expire unless re-enacted before that time is the act authorizing the Government to maintain a $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund. Use of this fund to prevent wide fluctuations in the relative value of the dollar, the franc and the pound is part of the new monetary agreement between the United States, Great Britain and France.

Secretary Morgenthau announced recently he would recommend that the fund be continued.

Due to expire also unless renewed by Congress is the power of President Roosevelt to reduce further the gold value of the dollar.

Among other questions which the chamber said probably would be considered by the board were: Re-employment efforts, social security, consumer co-operatives, price discrimination legislation, agricultural policy, foreign commerce, national defense and subversive activities and Federal budget.

In The Empire State.

The nomination of Justice William F. Bleakley, of Westchester County, as the Republican candidate for Governor of New York, signifies the crumbling of Old Guard mastery over the Party in the Empire State.

Its significance, therefore, is more than local. For it indicates that substance is lacking to the charge, frequently made since the Cleveland convention, that the Old Guard of the G. O. P., in accepting the candidacy of Gov. Landon, was staging a strategic retreat with no intention of surrendering control. The reality of this change of leadership, in a State where traditional Republicanism was very strongly entrenched, is unmistakable.

Judge Bleakley, who has made an excellent record on the bench and is well liked in his part of the State, also holds distinctly progressive views on local government. This was seen in his insistence that the platform rectify the situation caused by the Supreme Court's invalidation of the New York law seeking to fix minimum wages for women workers. The Republican nominee demands that this reform be accomplished by amendment of the Federal Constitution if adequate power is not now vested in the State Legislature.

In this as in other particulars, and indeed in its whole general philosophy, the platform of the New York Republican Party follows closely the national platform. The keynote is struck in the declaration that: "The government of the State . . . should co-operate with, not be dominated by, the Federal Government."

The campaign, evidently, is to be fought by Republican candidates on national issues as applied to State affairs. The primary target is, of course, Gov. Herbert H. Lehman and his administration. But the assault includes Gov. Lehman's predecessor, President Roosevelt, and the New Deal.

In language and in content the platform of the State Democratic Party does not resemble the Philadelphia platform so closely. But in spirit they are one, a circumstance not difficult to understand in view of the intimate relations that have existed during the past three years between Washington and Albany and in view of the fact that some of the men who wrote the Philadelphia platform also wrote the one adopted at Syracuse. While dealing very largely with State issues, it reflects New Deal philosophy in many particulars. In contrast with the stand taken by their opponents in the State, the Democrats say:

We will oppose the misuse of the doctrine of States' rights to create a no man's land from which monopolistic and exploiting interests may snipe at our economic progress and reduce government to impotence.

While boasting of the reduction made in the accumulated deficit made by the Lehman administration during the past year, the Syracuse platform makes so many pledges whose execution involves an increase in governmental expenditure as to throw doubt on the promise "to achieve a balanced budget."

Thus it is that the local campaign in New York promises to be in microcosm a replica of the campaign now being waged throughout the Nation as a whole.

Merit At The Top.

Gov. Landon's emphasis upon the need for competent executives to head the various departments of the Federal Government is most opportune. It is not only the position of Postmaster General that calls for the services of a trained man free from political obligations and prepared to give all his time to administering his office. The other Cabinet members likewise must be persons with a high degree of executive ability, if their duties are to be discharged efficiently.

While it is obviously necessary for the President to select as his chief aids individuals who sympathize with his general objectives and are prepared to carry out party policies, the purely political appointees is a liability to efficient administration. When the Federal Government was one of limited powers, and departmental problems could be understood by men of average intelligence without special training, the country was able to "worry along" with weak politically-minded Cabinet officials.

The time has come, however, when the inadequacies of a political Cabinet are too glaring to be tolerated. President Roosevelt's singular indifference to the necessity of placing specially qualified persons at the head of all the great executive establishments creates the gravest doubts as to his own understanding of the difficult executive problems that arise as governmental activities are extended.

Sceptics may smile at Gov. Landon's statement that he would not hesitate to step across party lines in organizing a Cabinet. But if the merit system is an aid to good government, it surely should apply in some degree to the topmost ranks of governmental executives as well as to their subordinates. A politically-minded Cabinet is rapidly becoming an anachronism in a country which makes departmental heads responsible for the execution of many tasks calling for business ability and specialized training of a kind which the average professional politician conspicuously lacks.

A Cabinet of picked executives, chosen without regard to party affiliations, seems, therefore, to be the logical outcome of an extension of governmental activities that call for expert non-political administration of the Federal departments.

Obstacles Ahead.

When President Roosevelt shocked the delegates to the London monetary conference of 1933 by brusquely refusing to consider any plan for temporary stabilization of the dollar his action was enthusiastically hailed by advocates of a managed currency as marking a definite break with an outworn system of fixed currencies tied to gold. The President himself explained that he was seeking "the kind of dollar which a generation hence will have the same purchasing power and debt-paying power as the dollar value we hope to attain in the near future."

Belief in the wonder-working effects of monetary manipulation has waned so rapidly since those sanguine days that we are now actually in danger of exaggerating the benefits of the vague commitments made by Secretary Morgenthau to co-operate with the British in protecting the franc from excessive fluctuations.

If the franc should be cut about 30 per cent in value, as reported, its new exchange value in terms of our money will closely approximate the quotations of June, 1933, when the London monetary conference was in session. Moreover, at present the pound and the dollar are not very far from the old ratio which prevailed when England abandoned the gold standard in 1931.

Thus, after all these years of currency "management," which has meant exchange anarchy, the dollar, and the pound are apparently to be provisionally stabilized at rates not far removed from their original relative values, despite interim declines in the gold values of these currencies.

In the meantime, however, the depreciation of the pound sterling and the devaluation of the dollar have forced other countries to readjust their currencies and have led to rapid multiplication of protective trade barriers, import restrictions, and exchange controls in all parts of the world. Shifting currency values have also enormously increased the difficulties of re-establishing a balance of trade in foreign dealings and have added to the pressure upon the gold bloc nations to devalue.

The obstacles that have been raised to international trade during the past few years cannot be suddenly swept away by a mere agreement to co-operate in the restoration of more stable exchange conditions. We are undoubtedly moving in the right direction, but the period of uncertainty is by no means over. Discussion of the war debt problem is already being revived. And it is a foregone conclusion that efforts to collect substantial sums from the indebted countries as the price of our entering a definitive stabilization agreement would be not only futile, but if possible, would introduce a further element of exchange demoralization into the situation.

There are also other unknown factors that have a very direct bearing upon the outlook for an international exchange accord. Among these may be numbered the uncertain fiscal policies of this country and of France and the apparent reluctance of the British to relinquish their system of managed currency. If internal threats to currency stability, such as budgetary deficits and excessive spending here or in France, should be eliminated there still remains the possibility that exchange relationships will not be such as to assure that balance in foreign payments needed to maintain currency stability.

Assuming that such adjustments can be satisfactorily made and that the administrative machinery for giving them effect can be provided, one very serious major obstacle to expansion of foreign trade will have been removed. But trade restrictions, prohibitive tariffs and exchange regulations are due only in part to disordered currencies. They are also the outgrowth of the disturbed political state of Europe and the consequent desire of many nations to achieve greater economic self-sufficiency.

If the world's leading trading nations had not abandoned stable currencies to engage in competitive or protective devaluation or depreciation, the trend toward autarchy doubtless would have been less pronounced. Now, however, the mischief has been done and a mere change of heart on our part is not sufficient to undo overnight the damage done to world trade by empirical efforts to achieve recovery by tampering with currency values.

The Costs Of Crime.

Crime is on the increase in Washington. That is why Superintendent Brown has addressed a second note to the Commissioners in support of his request for a substantially larger appropriation for the police next year. His arguments are difficult to refute. Washington police made 12,000 more arrests in the fiscal year of 1936 than in 1935. A similar increase is found in the number of persons held for trial or grand jury action. The only offense showing a decline during 1936 was intoxication. The detective bureau made 5,171 arrests or 1,000 more than last year. Robbery increased by 237 cases. Responsibilities of the police have been greatly augmented. With only 25 men added to his force under the present budget, Maj. Brown insists that 344 additional policemen are necessary to afford adequate protection to this growing city.

Only one argument can be made against granting this request. Funds may not be available and taxes are already high. In the larger sense, however, adequate police protection is not an expense but a saving. Budget figures do not tell the entire story. They indicate only a part of the cost of crime to the taxpayer—and the smaller part, at that.

J. Edgar Hoover, of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, recently calculated that crime is costing the United States at least $15,000,000,000 a year in cash. But this, he said, omits the greater losses of a physical and moral nature. The extent of these is indicated by the fact that there are in the country 3,500,000 persons whose chances in life have either been handicapped or completely ruined by their attempts to beat the law. Moreover, these persons are responsible annually for 1,500,000 serious crimes, each one of which affects the victim in some moral, mental or physical manner. And beyond that, Mr. Hoover said, there is the financial and social wreckage which descends on an entire family when one of its members is sent to prison.

To estimate these intangible losses in terms of money is impossible. But none will doubt that they are staggering in terms of social distress. It is these hidden costs that citizens must remember when they are inclined to cry out against any increase in the police budget. By refusing to improve its crime prevention machinery, the city would be penny wise and pound foolish.

Much Smoke, Some Fire.

President Roosevelt, in a speech which was admittedly that of a candidate for office, has had little trouble in defining communism as a "red herring" so far as this campaign is concerned. Efforts to tag the red label on Mr. Roosevelt personally have always been far-fetched, if only because he probably doesn't understand communism well enough to be a communist. And the President is justified in the return wallop which he packs into the statement that false issues are traditionally used by partisans "to divert attention from the trail of their own weaknesses."

But while the President was denouncing a practice "as old as our democracy" he might well have remembered a proverb which, in one form or another, is as old as the original Syracuse for which the city in which he was speaking was named. That proverb is the one which asserts that where there is much smoke there is always some fire. The validity of the saying will not be swept away by Mr. Roosevelt's fervent protestation of "clear and consistent adherence" throughout his long tenure of public office, "not only to the letter, but to the spirit of the American form of government."

This statement, so far as it applies to his occupation of the Presidency, is not in accordance with the record. It conforms neither with the long list of New Deal laws which have been found unconstitutional by the Supreme Court; nor with the recent subordination of the legislative to the executive arm; nor with the rapidly increasing encroachment of the Federal Government on rights traditionally and legally reserved to the States. In any particular case it may perhaps be argued that such activities are socially desirable. It cannot be convincingly asserted that they accord with either the letter or the spirit of the American form of government.

Mr. Tugwell, Mr. Hopkins, Mr. Wallace and many lesser lights, not to mention the President himself, have made it abundantly clear that perpetuation of the American form of government is a matter of very small moment to them. And from that attitude, rather than from any desire to raise false issues, has come all the smoke about communism.

As a matter of fact it is not half so absurd an allegation as the President would now like to have the country believe. If communism is regarded as a practical economic system, and not as a bugbear for childlike minds, it is perfectly clear that the New Deal has gone a very long way in that direction. As Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, now chairman of T. V. A., once pointedly inquired: "What is communism but the meeting of private or local needs out of the general treasury?"

What, it may further be inquired, is the essence of the New Deal except just that? And then, on the sound Euclidean principle that things equal to the same thing are equal to each other, what conviction is carried by Mr. Roosevelt's rhetorical repudiation of communism or "any other alien 'ism' which would by fair means or foul change our American democracy?"

Such repudiation, said the President at Syracuse, is, always has been, and always will be his position. Not for the first time, Mr. Roosevelt greatly exaggerates his own importance in the scheme of things. The issue is not what Mr. Roosevelt thinks his position to be. The issue is the position in which he will leave the country when the period of custodianship allotted to him as a solemn trust is at an end.

The Forgotten Man.

Letters to the Editor

A New Deal Questionnaire.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been thinking for some time that perhaps some of our Democratic candidates for office might like to answer a few questions pertinent to this campaign. Hence, I submit to them this questionnaire, with the request that they answer each question "Yes" or "No":

Do you think that the budget will ever be balanced during the term of Dorn or the President?

Do you believe that the civil service law is being observed?

Do you think that the North and East should be taxed under the various alphabetical New Deal laws for the benefit of the West and South?

Do you think that the States should support the people on the "dole" rather than the Federal Government?

Do you think it right that the Administration should have repudiated the national contracts to pay off bonds in gold?

Do you think that WPA has been used as a political football?

Do you approve of the addition of more than $10,000,000,000 to the public debt?

Do you think that Congress has been any more than a rubber stamp?

Do you approve of the employment of 225,000 extra loyal New Dealers on the executive pay roll after the President had promised to reduce the cost of government by 25 per cent?

Do you approve of the disastrous experiment of buying huge stores of silver?

Do you approve of the President's repudiating more than 90 per cent of his pre-election promises of four years ago?

Do you believe that this Administration has increased the cost of living?

Do you believe that the Senators and Congressmen have lived up to their oath of office to support the Constitution and that they have, by their votes, been faithful to it?

Do you believe that any confidence can be placed in the President's promises after his repudiation of them and of the Democratic platform of four years ago?

Don't you think that this country of ours would get along much better if the President and his cabinet were "horse and buggy" and "boondoggle" along back to Hyde Park for a rest?

Do you fully approve of James A. Farley and his vote-controlling powers?

Do you not think that when government controls one's property, government controls one's vote?

Do you believe in having the Federal authority enter into competition with regularly organized business?

Can you name any "economic royalists" or representatives of "entrenched greed" who are still in the White House?

Will the President ever stop wasting the taxpayers' money?

Inadequate Policing.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Recently, while vacationing in the East, we stopped at Washington.

On September 23, at 9 a. m., we parked our car (locking it) on the United States Capitol Grounds, Louisiana avenue north of the Senate garage fountain, east of New Jersey avenue.

We visited the different points of interest, returning to our car about 1:30 p. m. to find the window broken and our luggage and personal effects stolen. We lost about $50 worth of clothing.

We reported the incident to the police, who admitted to us that this was not an uncommon occurrence on the Capitol Grounds.

The purpose of this letter is to ask why in justice to the out-of-State tourists, police are not stationed in this territory or if they are, why these culprits are not caught and punished.

It took us some time to find an officer despite the fact that our car was parked in the immediate vicinity of the Capitol Police Precinct Office.

The Need For Negro Playgrounds.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The National Capital Park and Planning Commission has met and once again refused the representatives of the Federation of Civic Associations an audience to present their suggestions for budget estimates. This right of petition has been repeatedly denied several times each of the past three years, in spite of the fact that representatives of the majority groups are frequently heard.

During the past three years $3,700,000 has been appropriated for land for parks, recreation centers and playgrounds in the District. Outside mismanaged, unfinished, Banneker Recreation Center, little land has been bought for playgrounds for colored children.

Not having the necessary land it is impossible to provide adequate equipment for our group, and hence, this appropriation goes largely to the whites.

Miss Baker's program for personnel is fair to our group, but without adequate land and equipment for our playground directors cannot get results and our children continue to suffer. Only small children can be trained on our diminutive playgrounds.

The high tuberculosis and delinquency rates in the densely populated territory south of New York avenue in the vicinity of New Jersey avenue is due to the entire absence of any playgrounds. In this area are three elementary schools having over 2,000 pupils. Across New York avenue is a well-equipped playground for white children, where scores of colored children stand outside and watch the few whites in this ideal playground in a colored neighborhood devoid of playgrounds for them.

The far Northeast has no parks, playgrounds, nor recreation center in its three and one-half square miles for its 20,000 citizens and 3,000 school children. These children find the nearest tennis court about three miles away in Anacostia Park, and the nearest swimming pool about six miles away.

Many of our boys have been drowned while bathing in the Eastern Branch. It is impossible to conduct a boys' club without adequate recreational facilities. It is a known fact that delinquency and tuberculosis are reduced in proportion to the increase of recreational facilities. The colored children are grossly discriminated against in provision for land and equipment for recreation.

The few small parks in colored neighborhoods did not share in the lavish expenditures on small parks in this city.

The outstanding success of colored athletes at the Olympics at Berlin, who brought honor to their native land, America, demonstrated that colored youth can excel when properly trained. It is to be noted that none of them came from States south of the Mason and Dixon line, which emphasizes the discrimination practiced against colored citizens in all States where segregation exists. Here in Washington colored citizens suffer in that adequate recreational facilities are not provided; they may as well be in Mississippi.

The solution of this problem is the delegation of all matters relating to recreation to a board of recreation which shall be representative of all on which colored citizens have adequate representation.

Poe's Resting Place.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In re the communication of Mrs. A. B. Cross, there is little doubt that if we were to consult the shade of Edgar Allan Poe he would desire his dust to remain undisturbed in old Westminster Churchyard in Baltimore. Mausoleums do not fit the democratic idea, anyway—they smack of imperialism and aristocracy, and nothing could be more foreign to the character of our beloved poet.

Westminster Church and its setting have changed but little in a century, and it is precisely amid such scenes that Poe walked when he sojourned in Baltimore. Let his devotees rather set themselves the task of defending the church, churchyard and tomb against industrial encroachment, and have done with this silly talk of mausoleums. Otherwise Poe's sleep might prove cataleptic.

What would Philadelphia say to a suggestion for an ornate tomb for "Benjamin and Deborah Franklin," disinterring their remains from the Quaker burying ground on Arch street? Almost needless to say, Philadelphia would be horrified.

But the Poe suggestion is not one whit more repugnant to Baltimore. I have resided at length in both cities and know whereof I speak.

Sidelight: A few years ago a Poe enthusiast—an itinerant house painter—who was a stickler for accuracy in quotation invaded the Westminster Churchyard and chiseled the letter "s" from the word "mortality," part of the inscription on the poet's tomb. He was immediately arrested, but his small fine was paid by some equally critical literati and he was released, the magistrate being in high good humor throughout the proceedings.

What a profligate this sculptor-painter would have made! Not a chance of this gentleman spelling "Allan" with an "e"!

LYDIA A. CROSS.
Washington, Sept. 28.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I note with interest the recent letter in your column by G. W. Mason relative to the grave of Edgar Allan Poe in the city of Baltimore.

Sometime ago the writer made a pilgrimage to this shrine and conferred with the pastor of the Westminster Church, in the churchyard of which Poe is buried. In the course of our conversation he remarked that the church is leased from an older organization and still another is custodian of the grave. This conveys again to the interested observer the need of a more permanent and attractive memorial in a suitable locality.

I find no evidence to indicate that Poe in his lifetime expressed any special sentiment for this cemetery, but rather his interest there was a matter of circumstance. It would indeed be a splendid gesture of appreciation if in homage to his remarkable genius there could be created for him a worthy place of entombment. Other distinguished men of letters of far less attainment have their individual monuments erected in this city.

"Rare Combination."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is either a strange coincidence, or a clever arrangement, that in your issue of September 23 the heading:

"Rebels 20 Miles Away—Fannie Sweepes Madrid—Loyalists Plead for Aid" appears over a cut of "Democracy's Lone Survivor."

By substituting Washington for Madrid, with a Civil War picture of Spofford as a survivor, one would experience a setback of 72 years. At any rate, it's a rare combination that wouldn't occur in a lifetime short of that of our veteran Spofford. F. E. WATSON.

Red Bazaar

THE Communists held their eleventh annual bazaar last week, while you Constitution-mongers doted in your silk divans. The affair took place in the St. Nicholas Palace on West Sixty-sixth street. Dancing was the order of the evening, and root beer, popcorn, candy, blankets, radles, cosmetics, beads, furs, men's suits and overcoats were on sale, as well as Russian art work (sent on consignment by Amtorg). We contributed modestly to the Red cause by buying a small string of beans, which we later gave to a female counter-revolutionist.

The comrades expected to clear $5,000, most of it from raffle wheels and games of skill and chance. We stood for quite a while watching members of the party trying to drive a nail into a block of wood (three tries for a nickel) and it surprised us to see how few Marxists can drive a nail. They are terrible shots with a hammer and, for all we know, little better with a sickle.

One of the conspicuous exhibits was a booth full of books about the class struggle. Over the booth was a sign: "Without Revolutionary Practice." Reading it, we wondered why it was that capitalists never furnished booksellers with recent slogans designed to maintain their social system. But then we looked further into the booth and saw just such a slogan: "Twenty to 50 per cent discount." It put us at our ease, and we shuffled along, whistling.

As a matter of fact, members of the Liberty League would have been right at home at the bazaar. There were exhibits of the latest Paris fashions, a beauty salon, a jazz orchestra (interspersed with balalaikas), weight-guessing booths, and lots of raffle wheels and games of bingo. Most of the comrades spent the entire evening at the bingo boards. A few danced sedately in an orthodox and rhythmical manner.

One of the reasons for our going to the bazaar was to investigate a curious announcement in the advance information sheet which we received from Red headquarters. (The Reds have us on their mailing list, but for that matter so have the Republicans.) Anyway, the information sheets said that "two qualified physicians" would supervise the food-handling at the bazaar. We interpreted this to mean that the Communists suspected a capitalist poison plot, and were on their guard to prevent it.

This wasn't the case at all; it turned out that there is a health ordinance in New York requiring dishwashers to immerse chinaware in boiling water for a full minute, and the Communists, watchful for the health of workers, are strong for laws like that and are determined to obey them, even if nobody else does. We lingered at the cafeteria, and clocked the dishwashing. Darned if they didn't boil the chinaware a full 60 seconds—in some cases 65. This impressed us, for it showed that the revolutionists are people of strong character, who will easily liquidate us if they get in power.

In the main the bazaar was politically confusing. We saw a revolutionary mural executed with a duco airbrush, and were told that if the experiment proved successful and the mural stood up under adverse weather conditions, thousands of copies would be executed for permanent outdoor propaganda. Whatever else the effect of such an enterprise, it sounded to us like a personal insult to the duPonts. Matters like this send us to bed wrestling with our own soul.

Irish Into English.

In 1465, by the Statute Fifth, Edward IV, it was enacted that the Irish should take English surnames, as of towns, colors, arts, sciences, or offices, and their issue should use those names under pain of forfeiture of their law property.

This law caused some Irish under English jurisdiction to translate their names, adopt English names, or modify the appearance of their names. Hence McGlashin was translated to "Green," Dunnigan to "Brown," McGowan to "Smith," O'Donnell became "Daniels," McIntyre became "Carpenter" or "Freeman," O'Duff became "Black" and O'Briek became "Badger."

Frequently an Irish name in a foreign jurisdiction, by contraction or pronunciation, ceases to be recognized as Irish. Take the name Tuttle or Tutill—few moderns today recognize it as the ancient Irish name "O'Toole." A Tutill family held a personal feud with the family of the birth of their ancestor, John Tutill, of England, born in 1638. The Tutill historian informed the gathering that she had been able to trace John Tutill's ancestry back to King Tutill of Ireland. In Ireland "Tutill" is pronounced Toole, the second "T" being silent. In England, however, the second "T" is sounded, so that Toole (Tutill) in Ireland became Tutill in England.

Few Irish people ever change their names. Occasionally there is an exception to the rule. A "Kelly" family changed its name legally to "Kelllett." Had the family known the history and achievements of the O'Kellys, chieftains of Hy Maine, they probably would not have changed, and it is quite possible that the family did not know the "Kelllett" was as Irish as Kelly. Fair Enough

The World Series.

The social and literary phase of the World Series has developed into an occasion of such magnitude that it will not be amiss at this hour to leave the technical aspect of the impending festival to the more expert authorities and discuss the lighter side. There are two great sport events in this country compared to which all others are secondary. These are the World Series and the heavy-weight championship prize fight. They bring sport writers and customers from everywhere, and the continuity and the integrity of the game, must be conceded precedence over the big fight, even though the fights often outscore the ball games at the gate.

To be sure, the series sometimes presents one or even two ball games which are regarded as not quite worthy, but in any case a team which qualifies for the series must be acknowledged as the champion of its league. Prize fighters have been nominated for the championship through political or box office considerations, and one champion won it on a foul, another by a bad decision and another by a knockout which had the appearance of a dive, or a dry splash.

But not since 1919, when the White Sox fumbled the series away to the Cincinnati Reds, has the World Series been clouded by the slightest doubt, and this year, with the country in a tragic state of disunion, poverty and politics, if one may credit the outcries of the Mad Mahatmas of the hustings, the gate receipts are threatening to rise above the boom-time record of $1,207,000. Moreover, the boys are moving in from other cities of the major and minor leagues in large numbers to cover the ball games and indulge in the social frivolity which has become a fixed tradition of the show, along with those wrinkle-necked, thick-lipped forgotten men, the heroes of occasions past. The series is a spectacle, but it is also, in the off hours, a reunion, at which the veterans of the ball yard re-play far into the night the games in which they achieved their permanent rank in the bristling pages of the record books.

A Hank Gowdy will recall the home runs which he hit in 1914, before the devastation of the home, and the time he stepped in his mask going after a foul in a world series ten years later and staggered around with the cage on his foot like an Oregon Boot to lose the game. A Nick Altrock will remember when he beat the Cubs in 1906 and discovered himself laboring in a lumber yard for eating money until the club assembled in the spring and he resumed signing checks for his meals on the farm's account. The inmates of the press coop goes further back than I do in World Series, and it has sometimes been honored in the breach.

This year, perhaps, Babe Ruth, after a full season of oblivion, will pull up a chair and sit awhile over a noggin, relating just what he said to the Cub's bench in 1932 when, with two strikes gone, he pointed to the flagpole and, on the next pitch knocked a home run precisely where he had pointed.

The custom of providing a chafing dish meal and beverages for the old ball players and the inmates of the press coop goes further back than I do in World Series, and it has sometimes been honored in the breach.

The hospitality of the Philadelphia Athletics always was bleak and meager, for the owners are not festive men, and old Mr. Clark Griffiths, as a teetotal prohibitionist, paid grudging tribute to tradition at the expense of his principles when he was host. At Mr. Griffiths' first World Series, when prohibition was at its grimmest, those who held social credentials presented themselves at the mysterious room in a hotel and received each a Canadian quart, which was duly recorded on his ticket with a conductor's punch. But the Giants and Yankees in 1921 and 1922, the first two years of the press coop goes further back than I do in World Series, and it has sometimes been honored in the breach.

The writers—the old-timers as well as the kids who are constantly coming along to cover their first World Series—always wrench and strain to compose literature consistent with the magnitude of the occasion. Some do, and make a mess of it through overwriting, but there is no other approach to the story. You can just relax and just let it write when you are covering an event of great national interest. I wonder who remembers the greatest World Series copy ever written and who agrees with me that it was the best. My selection is the series of running stories in verse—1,500 words of it, including four and five changes of pace—all technically correct and describing the games with expert appreciation and delivered each night for the deadline by Bertin Berton in 1915.

The Transition Month

By William Lyon Phelps

October.

October is a delightful month for almost everybody expect partridges, quail, woodcocks, ducks, and various quadrupeds. The weather reminds us of the old fast about the British country gentlemen. "What a beautiful day this is! Let's go out and kill something."

October is the grand transition month between summer and winter. It has the mellow warmth reminiscent of the pleasant summer days, and the inspiring sharpness of the coming keen starry winter nights.

The poet Browning said that pleasant windless days in October, as compared with an equal temperature in spring, represented the difference between the quiet affection of friendship and the passionate heat of love. In his first poem, "Pauline," he said:

"Autumn has come like spring returned to us, Won from her girlishness; like one returned A friend that was a love, nor forgets The first warm love, but full of sober thoughts Of fading years, whose soft mouth quivers yet With the old smile, but yet so changed and still!"

In old times, October was the month for producing the famous ale called Brown October ale. This may have been the reason for the old song, going back at least four centuries.

"He who goes to bed, and goes to bed sober, Falls as the leaves do, and dies in October; But he who goes to bed, and goes to bed mellow, Lives as he ought to do, and dies an honest fellow."

However inspiring this song may be, I fear it is not an accurate account of hygienic facts. I have forgotten who first made a revised version of a famous proverb, which, while it may have taken some of the joy out of life, is probably nearer the prosaic truth. The proverb is:

"Who does not love wine, women and song, Remains a fool his whole life long."

Revised version:

"Who does not love wine, women and song, Remains a fool, but will give very long."

Campaign Jitters?

Middle West Observer Reports Landon Managers Jubilant Over Developments, Seeing Democratic Uneasiness Over Farm Issue.

By Hilding Siverson.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Des Moines.

THE SPEECHES of Gov. Landon in the Middle Western farm belt and the activity in the New Deal headquarters during the week of Landon's speeches constitute a topic for speculation, and the Washington point of view seems different from that of the Republicans in this part of the country.

Some of the subtle Washington writers saw evidence of material strategy in President Roosevelt "jumping the gun" on farm crop insurance. Learning that Landon was to advocate crop insurance in his Des Moines speech, the President advanced this idea in a special statement the day before Landon's utterance. Of course, when it comes to the actual merits of the controversy, there isn't a lot to be said.

Far back in 1922 an exhaustive study of crop insurance was made by farm economists in the Coolidge Administration, and every argument now being made was analyzed in his study. Nothing was done about it by the Coolidge Administration. For that matter, nothing was done about it by either Roosevelt or Landon, whichever is elected, so the contest seems to be narrowed down to the question of who thought of it first, and the score at present is no runs, no hits, no errors.

Capper Has Announced New Crop Insurance Bill.

SENATOR CAPPER, Republican, announced several weeks ago that he had written a bill for crop insurance, to be introduced at the next session of Congress. Another point.

C. C. Cogswell, master of the Kansas State Grange, was a pioneer in the advocacy of crop insurance. Proposing it before the National Grange about ten years ago and getting an okay on it from that great farm organization. It happens that Cogswell is one of the most influential figures in the National as well as the Kansas Grange, and that he is also a member of Gov. Landon's official family, being State tax commissioner at present. And that's that.

On the other hand, Secretary Wallace for several weeks has urged President Roosevelt to stand for crop insurance plan, but for various reasons the President hesitated all this time, and seemed to have been virtually pushed into it by the imminence of the Landon speech.

Republicans sent out scouts to see what the farmers thought of crop insurance, and their report was mainly unfavorable. There were disadvantages as well as advantages. In the meantime various business economists have advocated crop insurance and announced that it was practically certain to come, no matter whether Landon or Roosevelt were elected.

Taking all these things into consideration, it would seem that all the excitement worked up over this "gun-jumping" stunt of President Roosevelt is unjustified.

Farm Tenantry Issue Also Tended Nothing New.

SOMEWHAT the same situation existed as regards the farm problem. Both parties want to do something about it, but neither one seems to know exactly what. Of course there's a lot of solicitude over the farm problem, especially in this campaign year.

Lieut. Gov. Kraschel, Democratic candidate for Governor of Iowa, obtained an advance copy of Landon's Des Moines speech and it promised an answer, which he delivered over a radio station 15 minutes after the close of the Landon speech. Then Senator Marvin Jones, of Texas, journeyed to Des Moines to answer Landon's speech. Then James W. Ford, candidate for Vice President, on the Communist ticket, arrived in Des Moines to answer Landon's speech. Then, on Friday night, Secretary Wallace made a radio speech answering Landon's speech. The idea seemed to be to get as many people as possible to handle this troublesome fighting Governor of Kansas, who has caused so much worry in New Deal ranks.

Every day, it is pointed out by Roosevelt's admirers, he pulls a new trick out of the bag, and thereby has Gov. Landon very much confused and worried. So let's peek back at Landon's own stage trapings and see whether the theory holds good.

Strange as it may seem, the Landon managers view all this white rabbit pulling and use of advance information with great equanimity, and do not regard it as an evidence of New Deal cleverness, but as a proof that the New Dealers have a bad case of jitters and are so worried over what Landon is doing that they don't have time to frame their own campaign strategy, letting the Kansas Governor set the pace for both parties.

There you have the two opposing theories. You can take your choice as to which you want to believe.

Off the Record.

Bitter Tea

By Barnet Nover

A New Japanese Thrust in China?

In presenting what has been rumored to be the most drastic series of demands since the famous Twenty-One that were thrust into Yuan Shikhai's face in 1915, Japan apparently refrained from putting them in the form of an ultimatum.

Indeed, we have it, on the authority of a spokesman for the Nanking government, that the demands were made in a "desires" a "request" a "polite" a "French say." But strong must accompany this seemingly weak but bitter tea. At the same time that Ambassador Kawagoe was making known Tokyo's desires at Nanking, Japanese military and naval circles were showing great activity. A fleet of additional gunboats was sent to Chinese waters. What was tantamount to martial law was being maintained by the Japanese in the Shanghai district of Hongkew. And Admiral Osumu Sato, Japan's highest naval official in China, declared:

"We now realize the uselessness of continuing the present negotiations with officials at Nanking, for they have no authority to make a satisfactory settlement. . . . As soon as we are convinced of the uselessness of waiting, Japan will act without further delay."

How it will act and to what purpose has not been revealed. But one may hazard a shrewd guess that Japan's course will be in no essentials different from the course it has taken in the past, and particularly during the five epochal years that began with the occupation of Mukden on September 18, 1931. And the purpose has more than once been revealed by Japanese spokesmen from the premier down.

Long ago, Sir Henry Wotton, the famous Elizabethan diplomat, when asked by a young colleague how to puzzle an adversary, replied: "Tell the truth." During the last three years, certainly, Japanese leaders have done just that.

There was the famous Amai statement of April 17, 1934, when the spokesmen of the Japanese foreign office practically laid claim on behalf of his nation to exclusive control in China. There was, more recently, the three-point program enunciated by Koki Hirota, former foreign minister and now premier, as providing the necessary basis for orderly Sino-Japanese relations. These called for economic co-operation between the two countries, with Japan necessarily the dominant partner; co-operation against the Communist armies in Northwest China, which would mean the maintenance of Japanese garrisons and armies deep in China; and the recognition by Nanking of the independence of Manchukuo.

Since then, from time to time, more specific demands have been made of China by those in a position to speak for the island empire. Some of them have had to do with the status of the northern provinces of Hopei, Chahar, Suiyuan, Shansi and Shantung, which the Japanese would like to see organized as an autonomous state independent in all essentials of Nanking's control. Others have concerned themselves with the Chinese fiscal situation, which has revealed an unpleasant degree of co-operation by China with Great Britain and the United States; still others with the growth of anti-Japanese sentiment.

Chiang Kai-shek's policy during these years of Japan's advance on the mainland has been throughout Fabian. He was careful not to stick out his neck too far at the time of the bombardment of Shanghai, the defense of which became almost exclusively the affair of the anti-Nanking Nineteenth Route Army. He gave away, step by step, in the North. He agreed to the Tangku Truce of May, 1933, which provided for the "demilitarization" of the region immediately south of the Great Wall at Shanhaikwan. That zone, incidentally, organized under a Japanese puppet as the Eastern Hopei autonomous regime, has become, with Japan's connivance, the greatest smuggling center in China. Nor did Chiang intervene to prevent the signature of the Ho-Yangtze Agreement of May, 1935, which considerably reduced what was left of Nanking's influence in North China.

In the meantime, however, Chiang succeeded in strengthening his authority over the rest of the nation. The Communist armies, for instance, driven out of South Central China and now operating only in the Northwest, are now much less of a menace to Nanking than they once were. Chiang's latest victory occurred only a few months ago in the Kwangsi-Kwangtung area, where an incipient revolt against his authority was crushed. Today, for the first time in years, Canton and Nanking are again under one rule.

But, as the Kwangsi-Kwangtung maneuver and recent anti-Japanese "incidents" have revealed, the Chinese people have at last become aroused by the menace to China's territorial and administrative integrity embodied in Japan's forward thrust.

There is even an influential body of public opinion, of which the great Chinese educator, Hu Shih, is one spokesman, which demands that Japan must be stopped now and at all costs. Chiang, who is above all a realist, can be expected to resist the pressure all this element to go to war with Japan. But with China more effectively united than at any time in heretofore Japan's efforts to implement its "desires" regarding Sino-Japanese relations. His very strength is a temptation to the Japanese war party to act before he becomes even stronger. But that strength is one reason, perhaps, why Japan today is acting more cautiously than it did in 1932.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

Devaluation Made Simple.

So many pleas have been received that the whole currency stabilization be explained so the lay mind can understand it that this department today accepts the challenge. First, dear reader, to grasp the problem, you must understand that every nation uses something different for money. For example, England uses the pound, France uses the franc, Holland uses the guilder and America uses what is laughingly called the dollar.

Once upon a time the relative values of these moneys were well known. If you happened to play poker with a party that includes a Swiss cheese maker, a Dutch tulip grower and an Englishman who used for cash whatever coins he had collected in his travels through the Malay Peninsula, you could stand it if they met all your raises with these funny coins. You felt everything would come out all right somehow or other.

But all that gradually underwent a change. It was pretty confusing when Mr. Roosevelt decided to make the old-fashioned dollar something like 50 cents, but when England called the pound a quart, Germany changed the name of the mark to the peseta and Austria rechristened the "fluit," calling it the "gavotte," people who were at all interested in money became worried.

Russia then decided to change the name of the kopek to Petrograd and while the people were staggering around under that blow there came the stunning rumor that Italy planned to cut the lira about two yards in circumference, move it to the Coliseum and refer to it in the future only as the mazurka.

Then came the Spanish revolution, which did away with the peseta and substituted the peseta, and the peseta, which while it might bring 30 cents in places like Sussex, Kent and Old London was worth only about 7 cents in the Bronx, Geneva, Tokio, Greenpoint and Ted's Hamburger Lunch.

Things began to crumble badly at this point and chaos came with an announcement from Glasgow that the cipher would be discontinued in the L. O. U. Something had to be done, so France, acting on a telephonic suggestion from England and America, decided to make a franc with a lighter core. (It will go just as far as it squares, we understand. Ed.)

Germany beheaded a motion-picture actor and famous German model in the collar and the other day. The poor fellow probably posed in a non-Aryan collar.

Man On Horseback

Gov. McNutt Rules Indiana, Which Is More Interested In The Governorship Than In Presidency.

By Felix Bruner.

Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANA VOTERS are much more interested in the new deal in Indianapolis than they are in the one in Washington. They are much more interested in electing a Governor than they are a President. They are more interested in the State gross income tax than they are in the national debt.

There is a good reason for this state of mind. The reason is Paul V. McNutt. Probably no other Governor in recent years—except Huey Long—has built up such a State political organization or has ruled a State so absolutely. They call McNutt a Fascist, the man on horseback and just plain boss.

Only in his success in building up a political organization in a short space of time does McNutt resemble the late Huey. The Indiana Governor is a former college dean, lawyer, orator and one of the handsomest men in the State.

He makes no secret of the fact that he believes he has a rendezvous with Destiny. He said as much to his associates when he was dean of the law school of Indiana University. He said he intended some day to be President of the United States.

As the first step he succeeded in being elected commander of the American Legion. As the second step, he became Governor of Indiana. As the third step—well, Destiny will be waiting for someone in Washington in 1940.

McNutt May Have Overplayed His Hand.

BUT THERE are evidences that McNutt may have overplayed his hand. He not only has balanced the State budget, but he has "overbalanced" it. He has so much money in the State Treasury that the taxpayers are howling about it. He has so many people on the State pay roll that the voters are showing a tendency to revolt.

The basis of the McNutt financial policy is the gross income tax. This is a glorified sales and income tax combined. It requires that every one, wage earner, professional man, merchant, corporation, must turn over to the State a certain percentage of his gross earnings. To the individual it is merely a 1 per cent income tax. To the merchant it is a 1 per cent tax on every dollar he takes in regardless of how often he turns over his money in the course of a year. To a different class of tax in that it is assessed against the seller and not the buyer, although some hothead merchants pass it on by collecting the percentage from the customer when making a sale. Others, no doubt, add it to the price.

Most of This Tax Goes to State Treasury.

A goodly portion of the receipts of this tax goes into the State treasury. It not only has balanced the budget, but it has built up a reserve of $12,000,000. A considerable other portion goes to the counties on the basis of about $500 a year for each school "unit," which defined means each teacher together with each block of 40 pupils. All of which sounds good on the surface, except for these facts:

Indiana is a rural State. It has one large city, Indianapolis, and one large industrial center, the valmet region, which means Lake County. A high proportion of the tax is collected in these two places, but most of it is distributed to the rural counties. It is a new form of wealth distribution, taking money away from the city dwellers and giving it to the farmers. Or is it?

Which brings us to the "Two Per Cent Club." There is no law in Indiana against soliciting political funds from State employees. Result, everybody in the State pay roll kicks in two per cent of each pay check to the Democratic organization. More employees, more funds in the war chest. The Indianapolis News editorially urged the Capitol and the State Office Building. Now it is occupying one private building after another.

Democrats Take Over Two Papers.

SO SUCCESSFUL has the "Two Per Cent Club" been that the party organization has taken over two of the largest newspapers in the northern part of the State, the South Bend News-Times and the Fort Wayne Journal-Gazette. Unlike the Maine Democrats, the Indiana Democrats didn't wait for the National Committee to send them an editor. They took on the job themselves.

There is one difficulty which McNutt has been unable to overcome. That is the provision in the Constitution which provides that a Governor may serve only one term of four years. McNutt's term expires at the end of this year.

He chose as his successor M. Clifford Townsend, of Marion, his Lieutenant Governor. Townsend isn't too popular with some of the leading Democrats. These include the State's two Senators, Frederick Van Nuys and Sherman Minton. The Republican candidate is Raymond S. Springer, of Greensville, whom McNutt defeated in 1932.

This year, for the first time, Indiana voters will be given two ballots. Presidential electors on one, local and State candidates on the other. The Republican drive is centered against Townsend. President Roosevelt is mentioned only occasionally.

There is a feeling that McNutt has overplayed his hand and that the voters are revolting. If this revolt gets big enough it is possible that it may be instrumental in electing Huey P. Long, but in carrying the State for Landon.

A recent straw vote taken by the Indianapolis News at the Indiana State Fair showed 1,677 votes for Landon and 1,296 votes for Roosevelt. Only 47 were cast for William Lemke. He does not figure in the Indiana situation as he does in the Northwest. Roosevelt carried Indiana in 1932 by 185,000 votes.

The State has eleven Democratic Representatives in Congress and one Republican, Charles Halleck, of the Second District. The Republicans are almost certain to elect a number of Representatives. Roosevelt's strength appears to lie in Indianapolis, in the steel district in Lake County. He also has considerable strength in the mining regions of Southwestern Indiana, but it is reported that this strength

China Rejects Tokyo Demand

For Payments

Ready to Fight to Last Ditch and Ask Indemnities From Japan.

By the Associated Press.

Tokyo, Sept. 30.—China has flatly rejected Japanese demands for indemnities after alleged anti-Japanese "incidents," dispatches to Tokyo newspapers from Shanghai asserted today.

Chinese authorities have told Japanese officials, the dispatches added, they will not only "fight to the last ditch" but will make demands themselves.

The Japanese newspapers listed among the Chinese demands:

1. Recovery of Manchukuo.
2. Cancellation of the Shanghai truce which followed bitter fighting between Japanese and Chinese around Shanghai in 1932 after a Chinese embargo on Japanese-manufactured goods.
3. Suppression of Japanese smuggling in North China.
4. Cessation of increases in Japanese troops in North China.
5. Halting of Japanese interference in the administration of five northern provinces over which the Tokyo government is reported to have demanded jurisdiction.

The reports from Shanghai declared Chiang Kai-shek, Chinese dictator, contended Japan's demands constituted violation of China's sovereignty.

Neither can Chiang return under Japanese pressure to Nanking to negotiate the Sino-Japanese crisis because he would thus suffer a serious loss of prestige.

Mrs. Borden Honor Guest At Party Here

Visitor, Just Back From Orient, Entertained by Comdr. Clayton.

Former Associate of Dr. William Beebe Edited Shanghai Paper.

By Dudley Harmon.

Mrs. Peggy Borden, who has done practically everything from editing newspapers in Shanghai to looking for odd specimens of marine life with Dr. William Beebe, was the guest of honor at a cocktail party given yesterday by Commander John Clayton.

Mrs. Borden is here on a brief visit as the guest of Miss Mabel Hunt, 6855 First Street. She returned to this country recently after a long stay in the Orient and the Philippine Islands. In Shanghai she worked on a British paper which was subsidized by the Nanking government.

Not the least unusual of Mrs. Borden's experiences were the weeks she spent in the study of conchology—the classifying of sea shells—on an island in the South Seas. She also went on two expeditions with Dr. Beebe.

Commander Clayton's apartment is filled with interesting furniture from the Philippines, and he showed his guests several exquisite pieces of Chinese embroidered linen. Among those present were several naval officers and their wives, who were stationed in the Orient when Commander Clayton was there. They included Commander and Mrs. E. M. Thompson and Commander and Mrs. R. E. Webb.

Others at the party were Miss Mary Cowles, wearing a smart black silk dress with a white collar and black hat with a quill lined with the same shade of tan; Lieut. Edward Pearce, U. S. N.; Commander James Conover, Capt. Edward Hagen, U. S. M. C., and Mrs. Hagen; Miss Mabel Hunt, Miss Betty Hardie and Mrs. Patterson Roberts.

Gunston Hall Girl Engaged To Ralph Sutton

Her wedding to Mr. Sutton will take place on October 10 in Johnson City, and her aunt expects to go to Tennessee to be present at the ceremony.

The bride-to-be has many friends in Washington and was popular during her school days in the Capital. She is a petite and attractive young person with dark hair and blue eyes, of the true Irish type. After their marriage, she and her husband expect to spend their honeymoon in the South and to make their home there.

The Merry Whirl

By MARYLYN.

Where to draw the line was the question puzzling a score of minds at the White House yesterday when delegates from Peru and Ecuador met at 1600 Pennsylvania avenue for a discussion of their boundary line. It was quite an event, with countless motors parked in the curving driveway and a foursome of aids—Maj. Louis Reagan, Capt. William Ritchie, Capt. Clyde Harisel and Lieut. Augustus Clarke—braving the elements in gold braid to be in attendance.

Not "Say Uncle," but rather, "Dig a Tio" was what the Brazilian Ambassador, Mr. Oswaldo Aranha, said to little Jorge Alberto, young son of the Second Secretary and Mme. de Sousa Freitas. Patiently the envoy repeated his request and, almost too seriously for his few years, the youngster listened and surprised everyone with his prompt chuckle and reply. Now when he spies the Ambassador he immediately grins, points and lings, "Tio."

Not so long ago Mrs. Frank Whitaker was suggested to head a troop of Girl Scouts in their hikes over hill and dale because, as her sponsor stated, along with her other qualifications for the job she loved to walk. In declining, Mrs. Whitaker agreed about the exercise part, but added, "only when I have a golf club in one hand." That ended that, because, after all, one doesn't lead a group of girls armed with a club, not in these days anyway.

Frances Humphrey, one of a group of young riders which goes out every Sunday morning from Fairfax, thinks she had a seashore for a month the other day. The party was fording a stream and her horse went half way through and then sat down in the water. Frances drew her feet up and sat a sailor fashion in the saddle until her companions came to the rescue and persuaded her horse he was not an amphibian.

Other riders in the group are usually Betty Marsh, Randy Richardson, West and Stewart Cureton, Nancy Wright, George Stuart and Kenneth Hayes. They often wind up at White House, the estate of Randy's parents, the Frederick Richardsons, for luncheon.

What's in a name? Well, that all depends. For instance, take the names of the horses belonging to the Mexican polo team. These offer a very good example of their being something more than a jumble of letters. Most schools for riding discourage talking to one's mount, especially when out with others, because the wrong horse might listen and obey. There is not the slightest chance of this rule being broken when riding Quetzalcoatl, prize jumper from Mexico. But the nomenclature, aside from its "unpronounceableness," is rather interesting. It stands for the famous feathered serpent-dragon of the southern country. Then there is Donaji, named for the Aztec queen of long ago; Tioxi, the domestic god; Vencedor, or conqueror; Toltec and Mayab, the names of Indian tribes, and Fronterico, Licor, Valiente and Muchacho, all of which need no interpretation.

Mrs. Joseph Kauffman, smartly attired in a gay autumn print and with black accessories, accompanied by her husband and two of their friends, was having supper at one of the popular spots when we stopped in the other evening.

When Mme. Pastoriza, wife of the Dominican Minister, has nothing demanding her attention, she either gathers in a foursome for bridge or goes to the movies. Yesterday, a typical indoor day, she chose the latter diversion. We saw her coming out of the Earle, hastening across the wet sidewalk to her waiting car. She had on a very becoming tailored suit of gray which had a luxurious collar of blue fox. Her blouse, brimmed felt hat and accessories were of the same dark blue. The Minister, who usually accompanies her on these trips to the cinema, was doubtless attending to all of the many little tasks the envoys are wont to save up until a rainy day.

W. H. Girvin, Jr. To Wed Ohio Girl

Of interest to Washington is the wedding November 27 of Miss Bonnie Marie Smith, daughter of Mrs. John H. Smith, of Cincinnati, and the late Mr. Smith, to Mr. William Harper Girvin, of this city, son of Mrs. Robert M. Girvin, Jr., and the late Mr. Girvin, of Rosemont, Pa. The ceremony will take place at the home of the bride-in-law and sister of the bride-elect, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Ellis, of Bala-Cynwyd, Pa. Mr. Ellis will give the bride in marriage, and Mr. George Heston, of Philadelphia, will be best man. The Rev. Andrew Mutch, of the Bryn Mawr Presbyterian Church, will perform the ceremony.

October 3rd To Be a Day Of Weddings

Dyer-Van Vleck Bridal Among Those Planned for Saturday.

Wilhelmina Cronenberg to Become Bride of Mr. Proctor.

Saturday will be more than October 3. It will be a day of weddings—a greater number of them than most Saturdays in June can boast. The October brides, like those of June, are wearing white, but most of them have chosen for their attendants gowns in tones which suggest the autumn coloring—rusts, browns, yellows or deep rose and blue. Dahlias and chrysanthemums will form some of the bridal bouquets instead of the flowers more delicate in color and character which predominate in spring and summer.

Grace Evangelical Lutheran Church will be the scene Saturday afternoon of the wedding of Miss Louise Eleanor Dyer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Dyer, of Wheaton, Md., and Mr. Perry Bingham Van Vleck, son of Mrs. Sarita H. Van Vleck, of Washington. The ceremony will be performed at 4:30 by the Rev. Gerhard E. Lenski.

Mrs. Richard V. Mattingly will serve as matron of honor and Mrs. Edgar Boyd, Miss Hester Hatcher, Miss Frances Rumsey, Miss Adelaide Flanagan, and Mrs. Harry Caulk will be her bridesmaids. Mr. Sidney Rumsey, of Kensington, Md., will be best man and the ushers will include Mr. George Menke, of Linden, Md.; Mr. Ferdinand Heitmueller, of Wheaton, Md.; Mr. Harry Caulk, of Wheaton, Md.; Mr. Walter Leibrecht and Mr. Edgar Boyd, all of Washington. Mr. William Van Vleck, brother of the bridegroom, will assist in the ceremony.

A reception at the home of the bride's parents will follow the wedding.

Another Saturday wedding will be performed at Luther Place Memorial Church, when Miss Wilhelmina Caroline Cronenberg, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William C. Cronenberg, becomes the bride of Mr. James Ernest Proctor.

There is also the marriage of Miss Virginia Taylor to Mr. Robert P. Hill, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hill, at Zion Lutheran Evangelical Church, and that of Miss Lula Van Buren to Mr. Thomas B. Rogers at Petworth Baptist Church. Two artists also chose October 3 for their wedding. They are Miss Henrietta Barnhart and Mr. Lawrence Edgar Hill, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. Bunker Hill, of Takoma Park. She is an artist in the commercial field, having studied at the Chicago Art Institute and the College of Fine Arts at Ohio University. He is a graduate of the University of Illinois, a member of Delta Upsilon Fraternity and is associated with his father in Washington as a designer and builder.

The popularity of October 3 as a wedding day carried up the coast to New York and down the way to Lynchburg, Va.

Miss Ann Holloway, of Washington, is to be a bridesmaid at the marriage of Miss Virginia Elvira Thowbridge and Mr. Edward Francis Drake, in St. Matthew's Church, New York, in Endicott, N. Y. Miss Doris Darling, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Darling, of Washington, will be married to Dr. Frank Jefferson Taylor.

In Lynchburg, Va., Miss Mary Elizabeth Hatcher will be married to Mr. Linwood Hughes Warwick, son of Mrs. Mattie Mann Warwick of Charlottesville, and a graduate of the University of Virginia.

New Ensembles Have Redingotes

Paris (U.P.)—Many of the ensembles in the new Couture collection have three-quarter length redingotes which are open from the fitted waist to show the skirt or dress underneath. The accompanying skirts are tailored and worn with blouses in a fine woolen material or in satin or crepe.

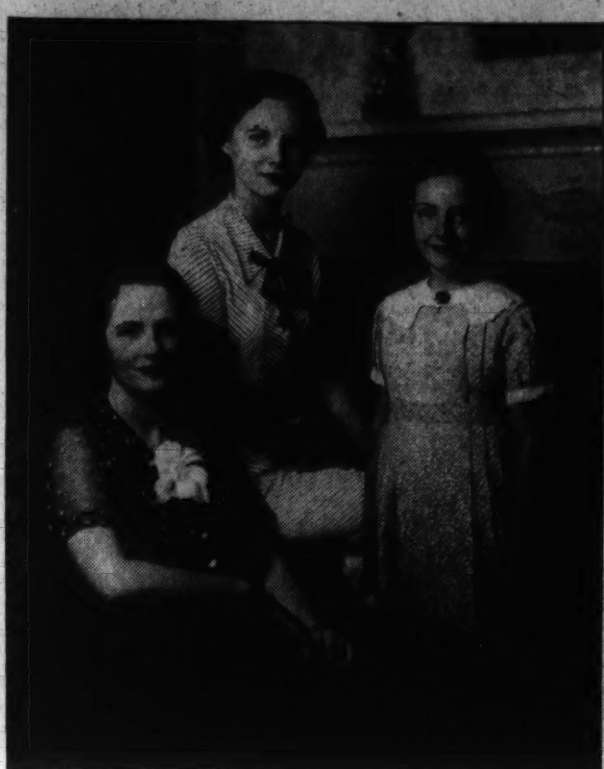

Many of the jacket suits are fashioned with full basques that are edged in fur in back, while the front is cut away from below the waist, to give the appearance of a short waistcoat. The dressier suits and coats are lavishly trimmed with collars of fur—sometimes forming an old-fashioned tippet and sometimes a longer fur cape. Fur is used for trimming whenever possible and makes pockets, buttons, tailored collars, revers and even waistcoats. Astrakhan, beaver, broadtail, shaved lamb and Persian lamb are the most popular furs.

Dotted Materials Enter Sport Field

Dotted fabrics, less in evidence during the summer, are now invading the realm of shorts and sports, and will be seen in many beach ensembles, dresses, sun-bath costumes and bathing suits for fall wear along the Riviera, and for winter cruises. Nina Ricci shows dress and shorts in rayon crepe resembling voile or shantung, with blue dots on a white ground. The button-front dress is fastened with navy-blue buttons of pyroxylin plastic, and a halter top worn with the shorts is of navy blue shantung. Heim sponsors brown linen dotted with white, in a play ensemble. Brown is considered the leading color for beach wear this fall—for Biarritz, the Lido and the Palm Beach season.

Representative Here. Representative David D. Terry, of Little Rock, Ark., and his son have been spending a few days at Wardman Park Hotel.

New Shampoo Tint Reportedly Simple As Ordinary Wash

The new shampoo tints are as simple as an ordinary shampoo. Gray locks actually are washed away with these solutions that come in such a variety of shades that madame takes no risk in artificiality. For the gay young miss whose bleach has been unsuccessful, these shampoo tints are a welcome aid. These tints should be applied by professionals who match the original color of your hair with the proper solution which helps give it a soft, unstreaked appearance. For hair that has been discolored by the hot summer sun, shampoo tints give it new life and luster.

THE INSTRUMENT OF THE IMMORTALS

Dance Conduct Claire Tilden Often Displays Your Breeding

Good Manners are as Important in Ballroom as Elsewhere.

By Margaret Wallace.

Young people in Washington would be surprised to learn how often they are judged on their good breeding by their conduct as dancers. In this city groups of young people are apt to include those from many States and sometimes from many countries, but politeness is very much the same the world over.

The young man or young woman who goes to a dance expects to have a good time, but they should not be so intent on gaiety that they forget their manners.

While a young man may want to dance only with good dancers and have no real desire to ask a girl who does not dance well to dance with him, good form often demands that he remember his social duty as well as his own inclinations.

One of the most frequent breaches of ordinary courtesy practiced by the modern young man is the failure to ask a young girl to whom he is introduced at a dance to dance. Many young men take their choice of a dance partner so seriously that they will even be rude when introduced to a girl with whom they are fearful they will be "stuck." In reality the young man who wishes to be polite has no choice in such a case. He must ask the young lady to dance if dancing is in progress at the moment or a dance is about to begin. After the dance he can escort her back to her party, bow and say "thank you."

Hints in Etiquette.
The exchange of politenesses at a dance marks the well-bred man and woman. The well-bred man does not take for granted that the woman of his choice will dance with him, no matter how well he knows her, but invites her by saying, "may I have this dance?" or "would you care to dance?" or something of the kind. The girl should respond "yes," and smile or "yes I'd like to very much." Or she may rise and smile and lead the way to the dance floor.

If a girl is standing or sitting with her partner of the evening, the young man who asks her to dance should then turn to her partner and say, "do you mind?" The girl should say "will you excuse me" as she leaves to dance.

Since the system of cutting in at dances is accepted in all circles of polite society there are also exact rules of politeness in this regard. It must be remembered that every young man invited to a dance is expected to do his part in making the evening a success and that some of his "cut in" must be with the girls who are not the most popular present. The other young men at the party should be polite and "cut in" when they see that one man is "stuck" with one girl for too many dances. One of the most popular women in Washington, who is not a good dancer, has solved this business of getting "stuck" at dances by saying, "Shall we stop," allowing her partner to escort her to a seat and at the end of the dance suggesting that he go and find a partner because she herself does not feel inclined to dance again.

Alfred Owings And Miss Steele Are Wed Here

Marriage Is Solemnized in St. Thomas Apostle Church.

The Church of St. Thomas the Apostle was the scene of the wedding yesterday morning at 10 o'clock of Miss Yvette Maquette Steele, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Steele, of Washington, to Mr. Alfred Joseph Owings, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Joseph Owings, of Kirkwood, Mo. The Rev. Joseph Moran performed the ceremony, which was followed by a breakfast at the home of the bride's parents.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, and wore a princess gown of white satin with a Peter Pan collar, and long light-tinted sleeves tapering to a point over the wrists. Her finger tip length veil was caught with orange blossoms, and she carried a white prayer book with a shower of flowers.

Miss Eileen Collins, a classmate at Trinity College, was her maid of honor. She wore a frock of coral corded tulle made along period lines, a hat of coral tulle with fingerless mittens, slippers of a matching shade, and carried an old-fashioned bouquet.

The bride's sister, Miss Gloria Patricia Steele, and Miss Ruth Ann Sullivan, of Yonkers, N. Y., were bridesmaids. They wore similar gowns of aquamarine colored tulle with matching hats and slippers, and carried old-fashioned bouquets.

Mr. Robert Knobb Steele, the bride's brother, was best man. The ushers were Mr. Arthur William Sullivan, of Yonkers, N. Y., and Mr. Francis Orman, of Washington.

The bride chose as her traveling costume a suit of dark green trimmed in beaver, with which she wore brown accessories. After an extended auto tour of New England, Canada and the Middle West, Mr. and Mrs. Owings will reside in Richmond, Va.

Among the out-of-town guests at the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Joseph Owings, of Kirkwood, Mo.; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Murray, of Muncie, Ind.; Miss Elizabeth Knobb, of Detroit, Mich.; Mr. and Mrs. William Sullivan, of Yonkers, N. Y.; Mr. Warren Heim, New York City; Mrs. James R. Kearney, St. Louis, Mo.; Miss Jean Gehringer, East Orange, N. J.; Mr. Lee Laughlin, Boston, Mass.; Miss Katherine Glavin, Esconoc, Mich.; Mr. Joseph Spitzke, Lakewood, Ohio; Mr. Ralph Fanjul, Habana, Cuba; Mr. Harold M. Newman, Newark, N. J.; Jack Straff, New York City; Mr. O. Benwood Hunter, Chevy Chase, Md.; Mr. William Barron, Trenton, N. J., and Mr. William Hanrahan, Bristol, Conn.

Miss Barnes Wed To W. D. Barnett, Jr.

Marriage Is Solemnized in Gaithersburg Church.

Yesterday at Grace Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Gaithersburg, Md., Miss Tiny Barnes, daughter of Mrs. A. H. Barnes, of Roswell, N. Mex., became the bride of Dr. Frank A. Barnett, jr., son of Dr. and Mrs. William D. Barnett, of Gaithersburg. The ceremony was performed at 8 o'clock by Dr. Frank A. Tyler, pastor of Grace Church.

The bride was gown in white velvet, made on princess lines with a long train, and her lace veil was held in place with a band of pearls. She carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses and lilies of the valley. Miss Lucille Barnett, sister of the bridegroom, was maid of honor and wore blue velvet with hat to match and carried Joanna Hill roses and blue delphinium. Mr. John H. Burnett, brother of the bridegroom, was best man.

A reception was held after the ceremony at the home of the bridegroom's parents for the immediate families and close friends.

Crying Habit In Children Held Serious

Some Sort of Illness or Bad Training Usually to Blame.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

THE CHILD who cries easily, whether girl or boy, is the victim of a bad habit which always will stand in his way. He is either badly trained or ill, and should be treated accordingly.

Most boys get over the habit early, but every now and then one sees a boy who has carried it over into his teens. Girls are granted the right to cry, and no one bothers to train them in self control.

It is an unfortunate habit for either girl or boy. The boy, as he grows older will find it as embarrassing and unpleasant as a physical deformity might be. The girl is apt to use tears instead of reason to get her own way. It may seem to her advantage, but in reality delays her development as a rational human being.

Crying, unless it is an expression of real sorrow or caused by a bad habit, is generally the result of self-pity. If nerves are responsible for it, the child's physical condition, or his environment should be looked into. One of the other is sure to be at fault. But the child who cries because he is sorry for himself and wants to call attention to his wrongs, or grieves or pines should receive the sympathy of pity.

The training should start with the baby in arms. A baby's only means of expression when he is hungry, or in pain, or discomfort, is crying. If someone always answers his protests with condolences such as, "Poor darling! He does have a hard time. Mother is so sorry," he will get a feeling of having been abused. Babies sense meanings long before they understand words.

If, however, the child's woes are treated from the first without comment and in a practical and matter of fact way, he soon learns to accept them as necessary evils. He solves with the child, but let him cry alone.

A Woman's NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

THIS TOWN is noted for its beautiful and efficient secretaries, those amazing office wives who look after the care and feeding of thousands of nervous and dyspeptic business men from 9 to 5.

KATE SMITH.

Goldie is the perfect buffer-state for a noted and harassed showman. She can say no in 40 languages and dialects; she is pretty, she is diplomatic, she can soothe a dove and sting like an adder. At present she is doing her superb stuff for Mr. Erik Charrell, producer of the musical spectacle, "White Horse Inn," which is one of the year's great theatrical events. To sit in her office for a half hour is a liberal education in every respect.

Her full name is Matilda Golden, and she's slight, dark and full of ginger. When Ziggy hired her, in '23, he said "Jumping so-and-so, I can't call you Matilda! You're name is 'Goldie' from now on." It was and Goldie became an important part of the fabulous Ziggy legend which endures and ripens to this day. Naturally, she's full of stories about that taciturn, eccentric genius of the girl-show.

My favorite is the one about the perfume who wanted to use the "Follies" title on his pet scent. Goldie kept bouncing him out. Finally he offered her $500 if she'd let him see the master. Out he went again. But Ziggy had heard of the confab through a closed door. It was one of the frequent occasions when he was busted. When the smell-peddler had left, Flo came out to Goldie and said, "Pity, but you know Goldie—you should have known better. You should have taken the $500 and split with me!" Oh, a great girl is this Matilda!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—I happened to be up at the Columbia Broadcasting parlors on Madison avenue when Miss Kate Smith and Mr. Babe Ruth did their first act-together. The two swell people, jumped in a nice way, add up to about a ton, and I was sure for a couple of minutes, that they'd have to use two milks. But they did all right.

Nothing like a visit to our "21" to see the sights. For instance, I saw Fred Astaire, Jack Whitney and rich-also Freddy Altemus all at one table. And the funny thing about it is that Freddy's flying feet can ultimately make him as rich as Jack, which got his by intention and he is toasting it away in show business! Astaire, of course, is the action of an eminent butchering family of Omaha. The name, if you don't know, is Astaire. I know, I wait till this just to plague the great dancer, who is now so veddy, veddy social.

Some organization is always going around figuring with pencil and paper. Now the chiropodists, meeting here the other day, say a housewife walks 3,000 miles a year in her own home. I'd like to have one of those corn specialists follow me for a year. If he didn't come down with a case of galloping fallen arches, I'd be surprised. A housewife is practically a flagpole sifter compared to a press-slave who tries to check up with what goes on here with the women. Incidentally, these toe-doctors advocate the use of transparent shoes for kids, so they and the mama can check up on the fitting. They say that the foot of a child of 10 changes in size every 20 weeks, and that buying long-wearing shoes is good for the saving, but bad for the dogs.

Pretty Jeanette MacDonald can't get away from Hollywood long enough to accept personal-appearance offers. Gee—when I first knew her she was a chorine for Ned Wayburn, the dance-master. And look now.

Walter Chrysler, Jr., who makes books while his Poppa makes cars, threw them a wonderful party at the Waldorf. The most interesting guest, to me, was the tennis-playing Gregory Mangin, who was France's ardent sweetie-pie before she went to England and met Handsome Hank. He's taking it like a little major. Probably because I saw him recently with a very pretty blonde.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Fighting Pink Elephants.

Anyone who has watched a patient through an attack of delirium tremens will not choose to behold another. The mental suffering is extreme and the wild delusions characterize the situation as acute insanity.

The cause lies in the steady and persistent use of alcohol—chronic alcoholism. An individual who indulges excessively at long intervals is afflicted sometimes, but it is more likely to appear in the steady, regular, or daily drinker. It has been recognized as a manifestation of excessive indulgence for more than a century and was first observed in sailors during shore leave.

There are chronic alcoholics who are in a pre-dementia stage much of the time and who will develop the symptoms of delirium as a result of some shock, accident, or excitement. I have known cases to come on as a result of a fracture or of a severe infection such as erysipelas or pneumonia. It seems as if a starter were required to loose the flood of pent up, distorted ideas. This is furnished whenever some factor lowers the reserve forces of the body.

The management of the patient is all important, and hospital care is imperative. In his attempt to escape the fearful imaginings of a disordered brain the victim may inflict damage on himself and others and this must be guarded against.

Clever Prodigy Now Composes Books of Music

Tuneful Freda of Years Ago Publishes Rhymes for Use in Nurseries.

By Elizabeth Young.

THEY LAUGHED when she sat down to the piano at the age of 5 and played a ragtime melody by ear. They applauded, too, and decided to give her music lessons, recalling how she had been able to carry tunes with amazing fidelity since she was no more than a year old.

It was rather strange in Freda's family, for her mother did not play or sing, and neither did her father, nor her brothers and sisters. Music seemed Freda's exclusive gift. And while Freda never took it very seriously—here she is in Washington today getting her tunes for children published, and these tunes enjoying a great success.

Mrs. Julian Berla, of Georgetown (the little Freda grown up to be a wife and mother), is, in looks, the kind of girl that novelists describe. She has enormous midnight blue eyes, heavily fringed with long, black lashes. Her mouth is generously, beautifully cut. Her voice is husky, boyish. Her hands are strong-looking, quiet, fine-skinned, with transparent pink nails.

From the Nursery.

While she has always tentatively considered writing popular songs one day ("the Irving Berlin sort of stuff") and while she tossed off music for original operettas given by the "Barn Swallows," her dramatic group at Wellesley, of which she was chairman, and wrote the music for the class song Freda Berla actually finds herself a composer of music as a result of singing lullabies and nonsense melodies for her small son, Michael.

"Practically ever since Michael was born six years ago, we've always had a singing session around the piano in the evening before bedtime," she says. "Out of these sessions grew the idea of writing a book of songs for children, to be sold for 10 cents or less so that they would be available to parents with little money to spend."

"They were to be songs about a child's life. So my first attempt was called 'Singing Round the Clock,' dramatizing the child's day from early morning until bedtime. When I had it all ready for the publisher, and had found the publisher, I wanted to do the book, and he was willing to take it. He suggested we make it two. That was in September last year. I hurried home from New York and pitched into the companion piece, which I called 'Singing Around the Seasons'."

Speedy Composition.

"I had already had it in mind, thinking to bring it out later, if the first proved a success. But I dashed it off in a month or less, and was back at the publisher's desk before the end of October. He seemed to like it. He promised a first edition of 100,000 copies. And then I came home and waited."

She waited until August of this year, when advance copies greeted her in one morning's mail. Then she began to hunt such local emporiums as would have the books for sale. For two weeks they didn't appear. She used great self-control, she admits. She didn't come downtown every day just to see. But if and when she was downtown she had herself a little tour of investigation. Then, finally, there they were. People were looking at them, talking about them, buying them.

And was she proud. She went home determined to do a third and better book—and this one all by herself. Not trusting herself to do the words for her first two collections of songs, she had enlisted the verse-making talents of Mrs. Marcella Mendel, of Newark, N. J., a former kindergarten teacher and like one mother of a small son, whose name appears with hers on the title pages of "Singing Around the Seasons" and "Singing Round the Clock."

Third Book Coming.

The third book is now well under way and will be called "Work, Play and Sing." "I'm delighted to find I can do the words," she says. "I can do the words. I had no idea I could. And it is difficult to find the right person to collaborate with," says Mrs. Berla. Since moving to Washington she has more or less lost contact with Mrs. Mendel.

Asked if her popular music-writing ambition has been permanently or only temporarily shelved, Mrs. Berla replied that she is waiting for fate to make the next move. "I am waiting, in other words, for the right contact to develop," she explained. "Some day I hope to meet someone who has enough confidence in me and in the music I have already written along that line, to help me put it across."

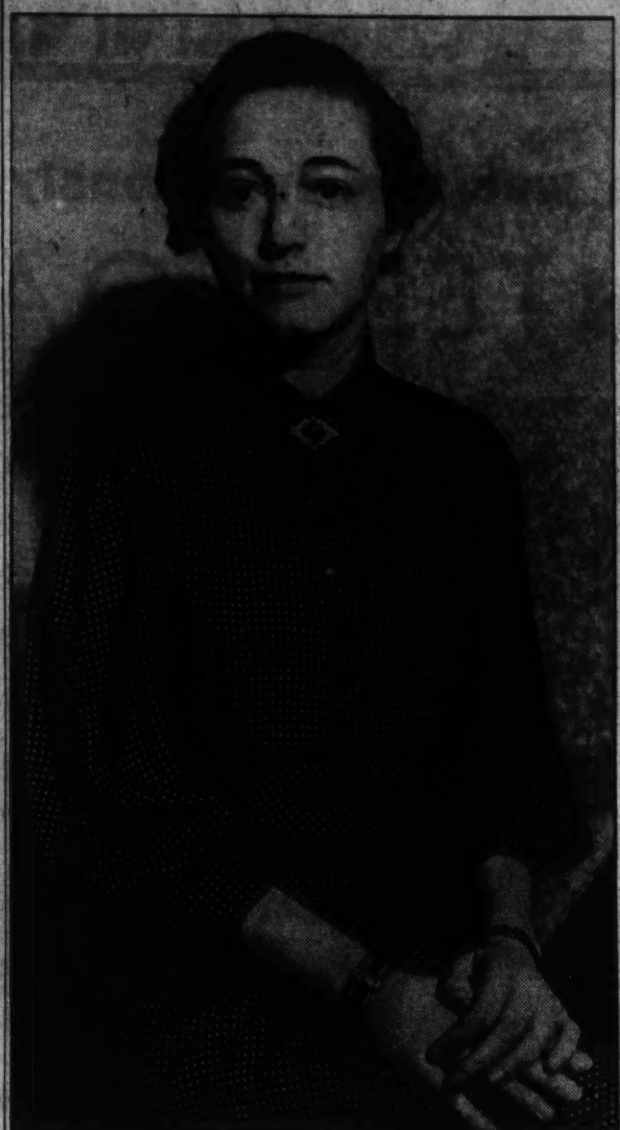

Under the stimulus of intense fears these patients will exhibit herculean strength. If sleep can be induced for six to eight hours the chances are favorable for recovery. The physician will be careful not to use drugs that are powerful enough to depress the vital functions and, for this purpose, paraldehyde is commonly employed as this chemical is readily eliminated.

It is necessary also to relieve the gastrointestinal tract. At the same time nutrition must be prompted as rapidly as possible. This latter element is too often overlooked, as alcoholics—during a debauch—are not inclined to eat even a fraction of the normal amount of food. In fact, malnutrition may be a determining factor.

Food should include a generous quantity of vitamin B as many authorities hold that the lack of this particular substance is responsible for the development of a psychosis. As is well known, the continuous use of alcohol kills appetite and most of these patients will have neglected their food requirements for several days, if not for several weeks. Intravenous glucose has been found to be a suitable preliminary step, followed by as much nutrition as the patient can take as soon as gastric distress has been relieved.

A Maker of Melodies and Her Inspiration

Six-year-old Michael Berla, above, so liked his mother's lullabies and nonsense melodies that he decided to publish them for other children to enjoy.

As a member of the Barn Swallows, a Wellesley College dramatic group, Mrs. Julian Berla, above, first tried her hand as a composer of music. Now she writes music books for children, dedicating them to her son Michael, right.

18-Year-Old Girl Asks How to Attract Boys Her Own Age; and How to Hold Their Interest.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Some of the letters published in your column recently have provoked a question in my mind which I wish you would help me solve. I am 18 years old but have grown up more quickly than the majority of girls my age. I work as a secretary in a business office, and although at times I may do foolish, unsophisticated things, I have the reputation of being fairly well-mannered and agreeable. I have a host of friends, but very few men friends. That is my problem.

The attitude I have always taken (greatly because of my religious inclination) is that the boys must concede somewhat to entertaining me in the things I enjoy. I have treated every boy I have gone with more or less as I would a brother, if I had had a brother. I believe, with "Bachelor" and "Disgusted," that girls should not take the aggressive in pursuing men.

However, there comes to me at times the thought that I might possibly adhere to my old-fashioned principles and at the same time develop and maintain friendships with boys my own age or a little older. As you said to "Disgusted," there is no need to break off a friendship with a man because one isn't in love with him and care to marry him. But still, such men as have been matrimonially interested in me are much older than I, and just as I am not interested in marriage right now, neither am I as much interested in older men as I would be in men nearer my own age.

How should I conduct myself so that young men with ideas and ideals similar to mine will be attracted to me? Then after I have won their interest, how can I hold their friendship? The very fact that I have and hold some very dear friendships with girls my own age leads me to believe that it should be possible to develop similar relationships with boys. Please advise me. Yours sincerely, FRIEND.

Technique of Attracting.

DEAR FRIEND: The kind of girl who attracts and holds the admiring interest of boys from 18 to 21 is, as a rule, a girl who is, or manages to look pretty; who has smart clothes and knows how to wear them well; who makes conversation easily, and who is an excellent dancer. Boys of this age, as a rule, like their girl friends to have poise. They don't care a great deal for the sweet, old-fashioned type—it takes an older, more sophisticated man to really appreciate this attribute of womanhood. They like girls who are popular, for they are a great deal like sheep at this age, they follow their leader and hunt with the pack.

Therefore, if you hope to have a plenitude of boy friends your own age, make the most of your appearance and wardrobe. Give special attention to your hair, skin and hands. Keep your feet and ankles trimly shod in the best your purse will afford; wear clothes that will accentuate your type, so that you will stand out distinctively from the crowd. Keep up on the subjects which interest boys of that age—and that you can soon find out by listening to their conversation. Adopt an attitude of serene self-confidence in your ability to attract; don't fluster and gush and strive. Brush up on your dancing, if you are not sure of yourself on the dance floor.

I don't quite know what you mean when you say that in the past, owing to your religious inclination, you have insisted on boys' entertaining you in the things you enjoy. But if it means you have been

Home Institute House Plants For Winter

THE EASIEST way to have a gay green vine in the living room is to raise a sweet-potato vine.

Any sweet potato will do. But if you look over the supply at the grocery store, you can probably pick one that has a reddish bud growing starting here and there.

Start the potato to sprouting in a light, but not sunny, window. Put it in any attractive pottery or glass jar which holds the potato upright and allows room for root growth. Do not use a brass vessel. Put enough water into the container to cover the lower third of the potato.

When the vine has started growth, set it up on that bracket shelf over the desk, where it will make a pretty pattern on the wall. For a low, bushy plant, pinch back the growing tips.

But avoid handling the vine more than is necessary, or the leaves will fall off.

These are the days when we begin thinking about our bright-faced friends of winter, the house plants. Ferns, aspidistras, dracaenas or flowering plants bring living charm indoors.

Have fine, healthy plants with little effort. Get our 40-page booklet, "Success With House Plants and Flowers." Written by a noted horticulturist. Tells how to water plants, what temperature is best, how to keep them healthy.

Send 15 cents for your booklet, "Success With House Plants and Flowers," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address and the name of booklet.

Chic Called Both an Art And Science

Plan Wardrobe and Then Stick to It, Advises Mrs. Nina Price.

The achievement of chic is both an art and a science, believes Mrs. Nina Price who recently opened a salon in New York where she will function as a style consultant for women.

Before designing a wardrobe for a customer, Mrs. Price puts her clients through a catechism to determine their likes and dislikes, the kinds of lives they live, and the nature of their personalities. Her rules for intelligent dressing are given in a recent interview in the New York World-Telegram were:

"Plan your wardrobe at the beginning of each season and stick to your plan. Don't be tempted by bargains unless they fit into the plan."

"Have as few clothes as are compatible with your mode of life, but have these tops. Decide on a color scheme that makes your accessories interchangeable."

"Have your hats made to order whenever possible. A quarter of an inch in width of brim or height of crown can make or ruin you."

"See that your coiffure has some relation to the shape of your head and face."

"Remember that chic is more to be desired than mere prettiness."

"Don't economize on classics. The right coat, no matter how costly, is less expensive than a mistake and can be worn year after year."

"Don't try to look like someone else. Get a vision of what you could be at your best, then work toward that."

"Don't be sloppy and save your good clothes for so-called important occasions. You never know when you will meet the day you look your worst."

"Don't economize on cleaning bills. That fresh look is essential to good grooming."

Hoover Rakes New Deal Tax On Reserves

Stiffens Enterprise, Burden on Weak, He Tells Mining Congress.

By the Associated Press.

Denver, Sept. 30.—Former President Herbert Hoover charged here tonight the Federal tax on undistributed corporate profits "tends to stiffen honest enterprise, to lessen national assets, to help the powerful instead of the weak, to cost men jobs."

"Discussing Federal taxes in an address prepared for delivery before the American Mining Congress, Hoover said he would not deal with 'political issues.'"

"No doubt any form of public expression can be distorted as politics, except crooning," he added. "What I have to say is merely objective sociology and economics. If you get political emotions out of it, then that is the product of your mind, not of mine."

Describing the present income tax as "a torment and a terror to the honest citizen," Hoover advocated a constitutional amendment abolishing "all tax exemptions on Government securities."

Tax Reform Advocated.

He proposed "intelligent reform" of taxes on estates with the explanation: "No doubt estate taxes do drive for the distribution of oversized fortunes but they could be made to do a better job."

"We could amply protect widows and children. At the same time we could dissolve any inheritance of important economic power."

Warning his audience that he was not intent upon demanding tax reductions, Hoover said, "That is not possible until the budget is balanced. Furthermore, the principle of making people pay according to their means is right."

"My Administration having more than doubled the upper bracket of the income tax and the estate taxes up to 55 per cent, no one will accuse me of wanting to give relief from the burden of Government to those classes."

"The corporation tax law providing a tax on undistributed profits erects barriers which stop the honest and necessary activity of a multitude of honest men," the former President asserted.

"The new law... says that if you use your profits to prove and build up this (mining) business, you must pay the Government up to over 40 per cent on these profits."

"If the Government is going to take up to 40 per cent of the temporary profits from each ultimate failure, as well as the successes, the miner does not stand a dog's chance."

"... This taxation favors the big mining companies. These concerns... can take up to dozen prospects and write off the losses against profitable ones."

"Much the same situation exists in all the smaller units of business generally. They have been made from plowing in profits. Without doing that they never would have dodged infant mortality."

"There are times when every business will lose money. It is at just such times that they cannot secure capital. If they have cash reserves they can hold staff and workmen together until things improve."

"The industries of the United States spent billions of their reserves doing that very thing in this depression. If they have been forced to pay out all their profits in dividends to stockholders in good times, bad times will mean vastly increased bankruptcy and many more workers on relief."

Amendments Proposed.

Hoover proposed four changes in the corporation tax law. They were:

1. A "reasonable" exemption from corporation taxes on profits expended for expansion and improvement of equipment and production. "It would make more jobs than all the boondoggling of the Nation and they would be honest jobs," he said. "It would increase the national assets and not deplete them."

2. To enable corporations to accumulate profits to meet contingencies of economic stress. "That is the greatest employment insurance that can be built up," he said. "It is not at the cost of taxpayers but at the cost of stockholders."

3. Application of "such pressures for competition as increased improvements and expansion of plants" which, he said, would "produce more competition and lowering of prices in a day than all the anti-monopoly legislation will produce in a year."

4. Changes to prevent "expansion of bonded debt of corporations who are forced (by the present law) to pay dividends on one hand and borrow money for improvements on the other."

"The changes, Hoover contended, would be a 'reversal' of the present law. 'The Government would in the end get more taxes,' he said."

Referring to the income tax, Hoover said, "we attempt to tax capital gains and we allow deduction of capital losses. No matter how complicated we make the industry of tax evasion, my observation is that in the long run the Government loses money on this tax because more people can conjure up more losses than the Government can conjure up new rules which foist their profits."

"But of far more importance... we place a dam against the free movement of property. The citizen refuses to sell real estate or mines or investments because of the huge tax on any increase in value. We create shortages of securities and we accentuate booms and slumps. It makes for vicious speculation. It is today contributing to a new stock boom."

Boxer Held in Woman's Murder

A charge of murder was formally filed against Robert Wood, 36 (right), District preliminary prizefighter, after a coroner's jury yesterday listened to testimony detailing a drinking party, during which Mrs. Sadie Watkins, 35, was killed last Friday. The jury was told that Wood, the woman and two men had been drinking companions for four days and that she died of a heart rupture after she was either pushed or fell to the floor in a bedroom in a rooming house in the 300 block of D street northwest. The jury ordered Edmund Sellers and John J. McGarrigle, both of the 400 block of D street northwest, held as witnesses. Michael Buckley, his lawyer, is at the left.

Woman Refuses to Clean House; Judge to Rule on Case Today

Police Court Judge Robert E. Mattingly will hand down a decision today in the case of Mrs. Annie Schaeffer, 55, of 1331 Eleventh street northwest, who was haled into court yesterday by health authorities charged with maintaining a health nuisance.

Judge Mattingly said it was the most pitiful case ever presented before him. He continued it until today.

Health Officer F. J. Schrider, who arrested the woman, said the house needs renovating and he offered to have the house cleaned by District employees. The woman refused.

Mrs. Schaeffer told Judge Mattingly she was caring for her invalid sister, Florence, on the income of a $15,000 legacy left them by her father. Of $400 interest received annually, $200 is used to pay mortgage on the house, leaving $200 to sustain the two women yearly. Schrider told the court he thought the house incredibly filthy and said it was overrun with cats and dogs. Neighbors have complained of the rats that breed on the premises, it was said.

Judge Mattingly returned to Mrs. Schaeffer $25 collateral she had posted and said he would decide the case today.

grid system. The English grid is a power pool arrangement, under which a central electricity board purchases power from various generating plants and resells it to transmission companies.

Morris L. Cooke, Rural Electrification Administrator, told newspapermen earlier in the day that direct application of the English grid system is not being considered here.

The President received Cooke, together with representatives of the TVA, the Federal Power Commission and the national resources committee at a conference preceding the meeting with the utility group. These officials later participated in the general meeting.

The President is understood to have opened the discussion with an outline of his idea of co-operative pooling of power facilities within the Southeastern region. Details, it was learned, were not discussed, but left to future "exploratory" conferences.

Would Use TVA Power.

In calling the conference, the President had declared public interest demands power generated by TVA and other Federal power projects "should be made to serve the greatest number of our people at the lowest cost and, as far as possible, without injury to existing actual investment."

The joint White House statement issued last night referred merely to possible savings "beneficial to the public and investors."

After the main conference adjourned, Commonwealth & Southern officials moved into an adjoining room to discuss with Federal officials proposed renewal of the corporation's contracts with TVA, under which a rudimentary power pool is maintained.

Apparently acting as intermediary in this discussion was Louis Brandeis, New York attorney, invited to the conference by the President. Chairman Arthur E. Morgan, of the TVA; McNinch, Willkie, Young and Samuel Ferguson, of the Hartford Electric Light Co., were present at this conference.

It was indicated that whatever agreement for renewal of contracts is reached may be predicated on some temporary arrangement, pending working out of the more comprehensive general power pooling plan. The Commonwealth & Southern negotiations will be resumed this morning.

To all questions on rates and details of the Southeastern pooling proposal, reporters were referred by Willkie and McNinch to their brief joint statement, beyond which they said they could not go.

Some cue as to what is under discussion is believed to have been given by Basil Manly, vice chairman of the Federal Power Commission, at the recent World Power Conference.

Manly warned that "proper co-ordination of Federal and private undertakings appears the only means of avoiding what may otherwise prove a dangerous and destructive conflict." By throwing large blocks of power which will shortly be generated by Government undertakings into regional pools, he said, costly duplication of equipment for transmission and distribution, such as is now contemplated, could be avoided in the TVA and other areas.

Sitting in on the general conference with the President were Willkie, Arkwright, Ferguson, Young, Lamont, A. E. Morgan and David E. Lilienthal, of the TVA; McNinch, Manly; Vice Chairman Frederick A. Delano, of the National Resources Committee; Cooke, Wehler and Alexander Sachs, research director of Lehman Corporation.

workers out on strike in Portland, Oreg., woolen mills, and 52 truck drivers for a drug company there out on a higher-pay demand, and 217 workers on strike from two clothing manufacturers' plants in Los Angeles.

The shipowners and longshoremen outwardly remained adamant in San Francisco as the zero hour came—the hour which Western businessmen and public alike have feared since the disastrous strike of 1934. Federal Arbitrator M. G. Sloss had ruled earlier yesterday that the old strike award expired at midnight.

Labor Steadily.

Sloss, McGrady and the Maritime Commissioners labored steadily to halt the strike threat, or to avert a lockout. Wiley's message to Harry Bridges read:

"Will you accept 60-day extension of present agreement on condition that if agreement has not been reached at end of that period you accept arbitration before board chosen by Maritime Commission?"

The Admiral was optimistic. Meanwhile Joseph B. Eastman, former Federal Co-ordinator of Transportation, in a final report, assailed shipowners for "inadequate attention" to labor problems and for providing personnel "with overcrowded, ill-ventilated and insanitary" quarters.

Elwood Street, director of public welfare, yesterday announced that Frederick M. McReynolds had been re-elected chairman of the Board of Public Welfare along with all other officers.

Former Judge Michael M. Doyle is vice chairman and Mrs. Charles A. Goldsmith secretary.

Retiring

September was a slow month for retirements. Among those who left the Government service officially yesterday, and the number of years they have been in Uncle Sam's employ are:

Alice E. McGee, Patent Office, 45 years; James H. Burton, Census, 25 years; Mrs. Mary E. Mitchell, Navy's Bureau of Navigation, 18 years; and Ruth F. Arthur, Statistics Section of Interstate Commerce Commission, 18 years.

Also William H. Harris, Anti-trust Section of the Justice, 25 years; Elizabeth Simmons, Veterans Administration, 33 years; Henry Hawthorn and Lillian E. Kephart, Agricultural Economics, 35 and 19 years, respectively; and Frederick W. Pearce, Bureau of Public Roads, 10 years.

These Treasury employees: Harry W. Atkinson, Internal Revenue Office, 38 years; Mable B. Carr, Treasurer's Office, 18 years; Albert L. Lucas, Chief Clerk's Office, 17 years; Mrs. Elizabeth Windridge, Register's Office, 18 years; and Mrs. Julia V. Edelin, Mrs. Ella M. Ricks-Sam A. Young, and Nellie A. Green, Engraving and Printing, 18, 35, 16 and 30 years, respectively.

Commissioner George C. Matthews, of the Securities Exchange Commission, will address the SEC union, one of the expelled A. F. of C. units, this afternoon on the relation of State and Federal Governments to the regulation of public utilities.

Auction

If you're ever tempted to toss a bit of Uncle Sam's property into the waste-paper basket, check the Treasury's procurement division (probably can find a buyer for it).

We never saw such a varied collection as was gathered in the procurement division's property yard Tuesday for one of the division's bi-monthly auctions.

There were filing cases, desks, chairs, hat racks, aluminum kitchen utensils from St. Elizabeth's, bicycles that once were used by National Capital Park policemen, raincoats from the Geological Survey, jar tops from the Bureau of Fisheries, metal mail bag rings and several sacks of loose twine ends from the Postoffice Department, a safe from Agriculture and even a framed chart giving the setup of the legal division of the NRA.

About 100 junk dealers joined in the bidding. The division has a mailing list of some 400 dealers who are sent advance catalogs of the items to be placed on sale about two weeks in advance.

The smallest purchase made was for a good-sized boxful of inkwells for 50 cents. Largest of the purchases was of a Corbett truck at $250. In all the sales amounted to almost $5,000.

Only about half of the surplus property that is turned into the Division is sold at auction, the rest being reconditioned and sent out to different agencies. John B. Whitman in charge of the work explained. To make certain that nothing valuable will go as junk a month before the sale all departments are circularized and asked to send an employee to look over the warehouse stock. The National Archives always sends someone in the hope of unearthing something historical.

All sales are final and "as is," where "is" and "as is," which means that the division takes no responsibility for broken or missing parts or delivery. The dealers are shrewd fellows but the procurement divisions' auction managers are no slouches themselves. Douglas D. Hall, Whitman's assistant, recalled one instance where a dealer refused to purchase a lot of broken electric bulbs for 10 cents, but willing to pay a nickel.

Procurement agents have to be careful in recording their bids as the dealers have a way of insisting after the sale has been completed that they bid $99 instead of $100. It is amazing how many pennies mean to the dealers. Douglas D. Hall, Whitman's assistant, recalled one instance where a dealer refused to purchase a lot of broken electric bulbs for 10 cents, but willing to pay a nickel.

Work on F St. 'Bottleneck' Is Completed

Fight Begun 100 Years Ago on 'Deformity' at Last Succeeds.

Traffic Flowing West as PWA Job Ends; Celebration Later.

F street between Seventh and Ninth, its "bottleneck" removed by PWA surgery, was open yesterday to westbound motor traffic for the first time since the World War.

Successfully eliminating a main cause of campaigning the two-block strip which bounds the south side of the old Patent Office building is debent as a straightened and widened thoroughfare for two-way traffic and with its former hazards eliminated.

Assailed as long ago as 1832 for its "great deformity" which caused "actual danger to carriages in the night season," the F street section is now 23 feet wider, in line with the rest of the downtown artery and minus the curves which characterized its Seventh and Ninth street terminals.

The Washington Post, together with the District Commissioners, Fine Arts Commission, National Capital Park and Planning Commission, National Park Service, Merchants and Manufacturers Association and other public and private organizations, crusaded intensively for the improvement.

With repaving completed and the massive stone steps on the south side of the old Patent Office building eliminated, Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, District highway director, ordered the street section opened to traffic yesterday. There were no formal ceremonies, but a celebration is planned for the near future.

The double street car tracks have been repaired to conform with the alteration program and only minor details in connection with the general improvement scheme remain to be handled.

Removal of the stone steps was financed by two allotments, totaling $134,000, by the Public Works Administration and administered by the National Park Service. The District highway department was responsible for paving work.

Long before PWA Administrator Harold L. Ickes, on October 18, 1934, announced the allotment of $100,000 to alter the Patent Office building, now the home of the Civil Service Commission, as a step toward doing away with the "bottleneck," the "F" street section had become a cause celebre in business, civic and city planning circles.

Congress Petitioned in 1832.

Agitation for the reform dates back to January 23, 1832, when a grievance committee headed by one Thomas B. Jones addressed a memorial to Congress, which read in part:

"That in the plan of the city, by mistake or otherwise, the public square situated between Seventh and Ninth and F streets, is so laid out as to cut in upon the straight lines of said F and G streets 30 feet so as to make a proportionate bend in each of said streets and to bring the curb stones on the sides of the square directly into the center of the streets above and below the square to the great annoyance of the public travel; giving great difficulty to that part of the road and actual danger to carriages in the night season."

"The awkward condition of the streets in this respect, not only impedes the public, but greatly lessens the value of private property on the sides of the square, having already prevented the erection of several private dwellings and of more than one public building."

Congress apparently did nothing to remedy the situation then or in 1890 when another petition was laid before Congress. But the campaign was not abandoned, continuing sporadically until mass feeling against the "bottleneck" reached its highest pitch in 1924 and was finally rewarded by the PWA allocation.

Both in its editorials and news columns, The Post emphasized the need of widening and straightening the two-block stretch along F street for the purpose of improving both the utility and appearance of the street, eliminating a traffic hazard and providing employment.

Local Motor Club Against Tax Rise

The District Motor Club, local division of the American Automobile Association, yesterday issued to the Commissioners a detailed statement of opposition to any increase in gasoline taxes, to imposition of any motor vehicle weight tax and to any diversion of gasoline tax revenues for other purposes than street repairs and improvements.

The statement was in the form of a letter signed by George W. Adams, chairman of the club's advisory board.

In effect, the club said the Federal Government, in its opinion, should contribute to Washington's street and highway program. Furthermore, it said, anticipated motor vehicle revenue taxes are quite sufficient.

Traffic Flows Where F Street Was a Bottleneck

With part of the old Patent Office building shaved off, F street between Seventh and Ninth now accommodates traffic in two directions. It was opened yesterday.

Record Number Of D. C. Citizens Change Homes

'Moving Day' Busiest in 20 Years; Shift From the Northwest Noted.

Big vans filled with furniture and in some cases whole families rumbled through the streets of Washington yesterday from daylight until dark, negotiating the Capital's biggest "moving day" residential shift in 20 years.

This morning thousands of residents will begin "straightening things up" in new surroundings. For some, not only the living quarters but the city is strange; for according to reports of trucking concerns, three families are moving into Washington this season for each one moving out.

Since rental periods in large numbers have ceased to end on September 30, executives of transfer companies believe the recent building boom is largely responsible for the huge shift this year. More than 2,000 homes have been built in near-by Maryland and Virginia the last year, and the Colonial Village apartments in Virginia now are providing living quarters for approximately 800 families.

An executive of one moving concern reported yesterday that most persons seeking the services of his company were moving out of the Northwest section into the Northeast, "because they can't stand the two-story rents in the Northwest. Two-thirds of our bookings have come from people who will live in the Northeast section for the first time. We have a good many, too, moving out of Georgia avenue way and further on out past the Maryland line."

One of Washington's largest moving companies has been so swamped with business the past week, it has not been able to take care of all its customers. "Either every other person in the city is moving or our business has doubled for some other reason," said one of the company officials. "We've had 50 per cent more customers the last week than we did this time last year."

Gas companies also have felt the effects of the moving season. They have received more orders for meter changes this month than in any previous September. Changes this season are 15 per cent above those of 1935.

The telephone company, another barometer of the extent of the residential shift, also reports it has had many more requests for this service than in former years.

Since 30-day rental periods are widely observed in Washington and least no longer are renewed in large numbers on October 1, it would seem the Capital's proverbial moving day would become a thing of the past. But whether this year's change means better times or worse ones are here, or merely indicates that a new home is the order of things in the fall, thousands of residents changed their address here yesterday and are looking at a new set of "four walls" this morning.

Barbers' Holiday Set for Standard Price, Wage Fight

In an attempt to obtain a minimum weekly wage scale for journeymen barbers and to obtain a standard price for haircuts and shaves, the Barbers Union, Local 238, has declared Monday a barbers' holiday.

A committee representing the organization, headed by Charles J. Bavello, will make a canvass of all local shops, asking master barbers and shop owners to sign an agreement providing for a $20 weekly wage and a minimum price of 50 cents for a haircut, 25 cents for a shave and 35 cents for children's haircuts.

The committee also will ask for a regulation of shop hours. Present plans ask for shops to open at 8 a. m., closing at 7 p. m. on weekdays and at 8 p. m. on Saturdays and on days preceding holidays.

As the committee progresses on its canvass, one man will be recruited from each shop to assist in the work. On Thursday evening, October 8, a mass meeting will be held to study the results of the campaign.

$103,000 Bond Issue Awarded In Falls Church

Richmond Company, Local Bank Pay $101.28 at 3 1/4% Interest.

The Falls Church Town Council last night awarded the $103,000 bond issue, authorized at the town election Tuesday, to pay for the construction of a sewage system, to the Fred Nolting Co., of Richmond, Va., and the National Bank of Falls Church.

The joint bid submitted by the bank and the Nolting Co. offered to take the bonds at a 3 1/4 per cent interest rate and to purchase the issue at $101.28. Although the bonds will be dated as of September 1, the bidders agreed to give the town the interest between that date and last night.

Five bids were submitted to the council, which, anticipating a favorable action by the voters, had asked for their submission some time ago.

The low bid means an annual saving to the township of $700. It had expected to pay an interest rate of 4 per cent. The Public Works Administration had offered to take the bonds at their par value of $100.

Work on the sewage system, the contract for which has already been awarded to the Boyd Construction Co., of Charlotte, N. C., will start this morning. The Boyd Co. plans to complete the job in four months.

The total cost of the project will be $135,000. A contribution of $32,000 has been made to the township by FWA.

Court Orders Test On 'Windfall Tax'

Indianapolis, Sept. 30 (AP).—The Federal Government failed today in an effort to avoid a court test of its right to collect the "windfall tax" imposed by Congress on money refunded to processors after the Supreme Court invalidated the agricultural adjustment act.

Judge Robert C. Baltzell in United States District Court ordered to trial a suit brought by Kingan & Co., local meat-packing concern, seeking to enjoin collection of the so-called "windfall tax."

The Government sought dismissal of the suit, contending there is no authority in law for restraining collection of a tax. The tax should be paid, Government attorneys asserted, in an action then brought to obtain a refund.

Judge Baltzell's decision was described by court attaches as the first important ruling on the tax, against which numerous suits have been filed throughout the country. Kingan & Co. had paid approximately $2,500,000 under the AAA processing tax. By the "windfall tax" the Government could collect up to 80 per cent of the amount refunded after the Supreme Court's decision knocked out the AAA.

Police Break Up Rally Of Striking Students

Campbell, Ohio, Sept. 30 (AP).—Police broke up another demonstration of strike students at Memorial High School today, but the controversy over the transfer of M. E. Graban, journalism instructor, continued, with Graban charging an attempt had been made to "ease me out."

Several hundred students were picketing the school when police broke up the demonstration. Some of the students returned to their classes. Others went home.

Today's intervention in the strike by police was the first since Monday when two tear gas bombs were released to disperse a large crowd of students outside the school.

CHAPTER XXXI. Makes An Offer.

"David," whispered Ellen after a final exchange of kisses at her boarding house door, "if you can really help Mr. Mallard, I'd be willing to be engaged to you permanently."

David put up his car and hurried to the house, eager to tell Pam his other piece of news. As he came along the terrace he bumped into the tall, burly frame of a man.

"What the devil?"

"Why, Dad—"

"Glad to see you getting in so early. Not quite midnight."

"Come on into the house."

"O, I've been waiting for over an hour. Pam's off for a walk, Ruben tells me. She shouldn't be prowling around these hills by herself at this time of night! A man who phoned a little while ago—" rather than seemed to be two on the wire—agreed with me. I couldn't make them understand who I was, but one of them said emphatically that if Pam didn't come in soon and call him back, he'd be over. How the devil can I tell her where to call when he slammed up before I got his number?"

By this time the two Barkleys had found seats facing each other in the living room, and David looked at his parent with a wary eye.

Jim Barkley was a mature, slightly portly replica of his eldest. He accepted David's scrutiny with amusement.

"Just stopped by for the night on my way down to San Diego. I'll be back in a couple of days. Guess you can get packed up in that time, can't you, David?"

"What do you mean?"

"That you're going home with me, and settle down to work."

"But Dad, I can't. Wait a minute. Let me tell you—"

"I've paid for all the wasted time I'll stand for. And this business of getting tangled up with office girls who think a rich man's son as easy meal ticket—"

"Dad, don't you dare say that about Ellen. If you only knew how I've had to work and scheme to get her! I've got a job and I'm going to marry her—"

"Like hell you're not!"

Each man jumped to his feet, glaring at the other.

"Try and stop me!"

"Easy. No more allowance. That will cool her romantic interest in you."

"It wasn't until today when I landed a job that she'd even listen to me."

"So this has all happened today! My God, she'll be suing you for breach of promise."

"Dad, you're crazy!"

"For heaven's sake, why can't you fall for a nice, sensible girl who'd make a man of you? What's her name? I'll go down in the morning and fix her."

"Like hell you will not!" David blazed.

"What's her name?"

"It's Ellen Greet," said David reverently.

"Eh—what's that?"

"I told you. And she's—she's the most wonderful kid—"

"Do you mean to tell me this girl you've got yourself engaged to is John Charles Greet's daughter?"

"I don't know. Her folks live in Hartford."

Mr. Barkley, senior, let out a roar. He flopped back in his chair and held his sides, laughing. David watched him in astonished alarm.

"And your mother and I have been having the dithers," gasped Mr. Barkley.

"When you see Ellen, you'll be ashamed," David said with dignity.

"You're the one who ought to feel ashamed, patronizing her in the way you've probably been doing. Will you please tell me how you persuaded one of the richest girls—" potentially—in the country to get engaged to such a blind young boob as you?"

"Richest?" stammered David, looking desperately scared.

Her father is the biggest competitor I've got in the business you despise."

"Then if you don't spoil things, perhaps he will!"

"I remove my objections, but Mr. Greet may have something to say on the subject. He's considered eccentric about young people making their own way in the world. He may not approve of his competitor's son for his daughter."

"Gosh, dad, this makes me feel pretty cheap!"

"I'm glad something does at last. You've always felt pretty expensive."

The front door closed and Pam, looking white and hollow-eyed, came into the room.

"Why, Jim! This is a grand surprise."

"Before I go into explanations, I've got to tell you the gorgeous joke on David—"

"Wait a minute, dad. . . Pam, you've had a phone call. Better hurry and call back."

Pam excused herself. She ran to the phone and dialed Mal's private wire and was at once answered raucously in a way both men could hear.

"Yes, sir, it's Miss Wyeth—"

"Pam, you've been so long! Promise me you won't go out alone any more at night in the hills."

"O, Mal—tell him, I've had a lovely walk in the moonlight, wishing he were with me, and got back to find David's father here. Tell him I'm saying good night—"

Pam turned slowly away from the phone. Her eyes were dark with tears.

The spring afternoon was so freshly perfect that Mal felt guilty not to be matching its joy and verve of growth with similar emotions of his own.

Hurrying forward Mal dashed up the shallow steps of the bungalow terrace, only to find his present home locked and deserted. He let himself in, leaving the door open. A note left on the telephone stand

Hollywood's Film Folks

By Sidney Skolsky.

Tintypes.

Hollywood, Sept. 30. Mary Astor needs no introduction. Her real name is Lucile de Vascenello Langhanks. She was given her theatrical moniker in a studio conference when she was signed by Paramount.

Now everyone who might have been at that conference claims to have known her. She didn't want to be called Astor. She didn't "want to be born in" on that famous name.

She was born in Quincy, Ill., on May 2, 1906.

She is 5 feet 5 inches tall in her stocking feet, weighs 118 pounds all dressed up, has brown eyes, generally wears glasses, has Auburn hair—not red or titian—and has freckles on her elbows, nose and knees.

She got her start in pictures through a "fame and fortune" contest conducted by the Eugene V. Brewster Movie Publications. She won second prize and was given a screen test by Mr. Brewster. The test was bad. Lillian Gish got her a screen test with D. W. Griffith. This wasn't good, either.

Then she met Harry Durant, who was scenario editor for Paramount in the East. He got her a contract with that studio. She played a bit in the flicker "Sentimental Tommy," which featured Garrett Hughes and May McAvoy. She wasn't in the picture when it was released.

She saves money on stamps and shoes. She will weigh a heavy letter and try to get it through the mail for a cent less. Regardless of how much she spends on clothes, she always buys inexpensive shoes.

She is a husky eater, and in the way of food, she's the meat and potato type. She likes to cook. Her favorite drink is Scotch and soda.

She hopes to get married again. She says she likes to have a home person. She wants to have two more children. She adores children. She wants to get married "because it is nice to have a guy around the house."

She studied drawing at art school and is a good artist. She makes fine charcoal portrait drawings. In music she prefers concertos to symphonies. Concerning jazz, she hasn't any favorites, but goes for the current song hits. She loves to dance.

She no longer keeps a diary.

Things to Think About.

Golf enthusiasts of my acquaintance delight in recounting the vast number of points that must be remembered simultaneously when the beginner "addresses the ball." At the risk of inciting a war between golfers and contract addicts, I must say that I am not impressed by these figures. The reason is simple. I am much more sympathetic toward the contract neophyte, who has about twice as many things to bear in mind. "Shall I draw trumps? Shall I cross-ruff, or set up a suit? Shall I finesse, or try for an end-play?" These are only three of the dozens of questions that lie in wait to baffle and confuse a harassed declarer. And, of course, the poor defender must wrestle with equally abstruse problems.

Consider the simple but delicate point involved in today's hand.

East Pass

As may be seen, North and South arrived at a precarious contract, having only one spade stopper between them and that in the face of West's warning overall. The blame was on the shoulders of both. North's immediate raise was highly questionable and South's two no trump bid gave a false impression of a double spade stopper. Nevertheless, through an extremely fortunate set of circumstances, and the invaluable co-operation of West, the contract was brought home.

West duly opened the jack of spades, and declarer's ace took easily. A small diamond was led to dummy's ten. West playing low, and the jack of diamonds was returned. West saw no reason to defer the play of his ace, therefore took in the trick, and on the reasoning that his spade suit now was dead, made a desperate shift to the jack of hearts, hoping to establish heart tricks in his partner's hand.

West's reasoning that his spade suit was dead was perfectly sound, inasmuch as the king still was outstanding, and whether declarer or East had that card did not matter. Even if East had it, it must be blank, since all the others were in sight, and therefore the suit would be blocked. But it was too bad that West had not taken the trouble to reason out this possibility before it was too late to correct matters. Certainly he should have seen that the one chance of running off the spade suit depended on two separate factors: first, that the king was in East's hand; and second, that he be given the opportunity to unblock. In only one way could this latter process be accomplished, and that was if West were to give him an opportunity to discard. The extremely simple measure of holding up the diamond ace until the third round of the suit would have afforded this very chance, and it certainly would not have required much acumen on the king's part to have promptly ditched the blocking king of spades.

New Employee Unit Issues Publication

The first issue of Merit, official publication of the United Civil Service Employees, new organization of civil service employees, headed by E. Claude Babcock, former president of the American Federation of Government Employees, appeared yesterday.

The featured story told of the organization of the association, details of which were revealed Saturday by The Post.

Editorially, the paper explains that the purpose of the association is to adjust individual problems and grievances and not serve as a union.

"Under prevailing systems," the editorial said, "individual employees who needed words of advice or personal acts of assistance which would bring results and, at the same time, would not require either a public airing of difficulties, or in some cases, unfavorable opinion by subordinate officials had no approach to those officials who could grant relief sought."

Woman's Bail Cut In Extortion Case

Over-riding the objection of Assistant United States Attorney Roger Robb, Justice Peyton Gordon, in District Court, yesterday reduced to $7,500 the bond fixed for Mrs. Mary Krieger, who, with Samuel Leighton Frooks, was indicted Tuesday on a charge of blackmailing Carroll Pierce, elderly president of the Citizens National Bank, of Alexandria.

The Government had insisted upon $15,000 bail on the ground that Mrs. Krieger was "a bird of passage, fitting about the country." Thomas Ahearn, defense attorney, pointed out that Frooks had been released on $2,500 bail.

The indictment charges the couple threatened the banker with the intention of extorting $2,500, and conspired to blackmail.

'Man Godfrey' A Comedy Riot At RKO-Keith's

Film Version of Humorous
Hatch Novel Fulfills
Every Expectation.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"MY MAN GODFREY," Universal picture of the novel by Eric Hatch, adapted to the screen by Carl Lerner, is a Washington Post favorite. It is a comedy riot, a film version of the humorous Hatch novel, which fulfills every expectation.

Every happy anticipation has been realized in the picture of Eric Hatch's gothic novel of "My Man Godfrey," which is the first time on a Washington screen at RKO-Keith's Theater yesterday. By adhering with remarkable fidelity to the hilarious contents of the printed work, this subject becomes one of the priceless lunacies of the articulate cinema. It is completely and convincingly crazy—a model of adept translation to the screen of a brief book that can be read at one sitting and laughed at for the entire length of its comparatively few pages. The picture, if anything, expands the humor of the novel through skillful casting, an ornate production and the deft direction of Gregory La Cava.

The story, as those who have read the Hatch whimsy will recall, begins with a "scavenger hunt" which leads two of the daughters of a wealthy Fifth Avenue household in New York to the derelict settlement on the East River dump in search of a "forgotten man," who may be exhibited to the fashionable nitwit assembled in the ostensible interests of charity in the swankiest of Georgetown hotels. Miss Cornelia Bullock, an austere young hypocrite and gold-plated "spoiled brat" is pushed into an ash heap by the bedraggled object of her quest, who, at a moment later, succumbs to the more casual appeal of her younger sister, Irene.

A psychopathic Ward. Out of this situation grows the employment of "Godfrey," the "forgotten man," who helps Irene win the worthless prize, as butler in the home of the Bullocks. The home of the Bullocks, by the way, may perhaps best be described as a private asylum for the shelter of as precious a family of psychopathic cases as you would want to have assembled in any one place.

Mr. Bullock, apparently of great means, is approaching financial disaster. Mrs. Bullock, a busy woman at social nonentity, not quite on the same side, is a scheming wench, intent on trouble making, and Irene an unscrupulous young halfwit who, after all, was the only one in the crowd who knew what she wanted and how to get it. She married the man!

Into this insane and distracted household, Godfrey, the macabred butler, brings the one note of sanity. He engineers a recovery of the Bullock fortune, guides the slightly bawdy Bullock women into something approximately sane, outlook upon life and their obligations to it and, for himself, salvages a career earlier blasted by an unfortunate infatuation that sent him to the derelict camp in the first place.

With all of its side-splitting comedy of line and action, "My Man Godfrey" still possesses an underlying quality of sound philosophy and dramatic strength that lifts it well out of the groove of inconsequential farces. It has something to say concerning the present social order and says it frankly, humorously and effectively.

The manner in which the piece is played, of course, has a great deal to do with the forcefulness of the comedy's humor, as well as its sounder qualities. It is played with consummate skill by every member of the cast, down to the smallest "bit" among the dump dwellers.

Lombard and Powell Perfect. Carole Lombard here takes on an entirely new demeanor in the role of Irene, the Bullock not quite all there, mentally. The assumption of an intellectual faculty amounting almost to mental deficiency Miss Lombard accomplishes with astonishing conviction and an overwhelmingly amusing result. William Powell, in the title role, has a part that suits him perfectly. Henceforth, I suspect that Mr. Powell will be remembered first as Godfrey and after that as "The Thin Man."

Those in support are no less happily cast. I sometimes tire a little of Alice Brady's incessant chattering, but in her present assignment as Mrs. Bullock, her perpetual aberrations are wholly character. Gail Patrick is a stunning Cornelia and Eugene Pallette a keenly provocative paterfamilias. Among the minor players, Mischa Auer, as Mrs. Bullock's family pet, makes no mistakes whatever, and other comparable impersonations of unique types are contributed by Robert Light, Gray Sutton and Franklin Pangborn. Jean Dixon, as Molly, the maid, and Alan Mowbray, as Godfrey's old friend of more affluent days, turn in their customary flawless performances.

Owing to transportation difficulties, the new issue of the "March of Time" was not added to yesterday's bill until late in the afternoon. It embraces the usual penetrating commentaries upon "Labor versus Labor," an analysis of the feud between Lewis and Green; "Commercialized Football" and the British "Tithing War," a study of the farmer's revolt against an ancient religious tax.

The comedy presented early in the day is off the bill, but there continues the latest issue of the Pathe News to round out one of the most rib-tickling programs assembled on a local screen in many, many months.

Railroad in N. Y. to Halt Service; 3 to Lose Jobs

Schoharie, N. Y., Sept. 30 (AP)—Page and Denny and Merton will be out of a job tomorrow when the Middleburg and Schoharie Railroad, one of the world's shortest carriers, suspends—a victim of the motor truck.

For 67 years the road, measuring 5.7 miles, has been hauling farm products and for many years Engineer Page Wood, Fireman-brake-man Danny Dence and Station Agent Merton Shaul have been the only men on the pay roll.

With the advance of the motor truck and the road's revenues diminished when the public service commission ordered about $7,000 worth of repairs, John B. Bingham, the trustee of the railroad, said the amount was prohibitive.

About The Showshops

IF THERE ever had been any doubt in the informed mind of the probable eminence of the impending season of living drama, being inaugurated this week at the National by first performances on any stage of "St. Helena," the Napoleonic play by R. C. Sheriff and Jeanne de Casalis, starring Maurice Evans, under the aegis of Max Gordon, it would be dispelled by the amiable visitations of such emissaries of the theater's better wares as Howard Herrick, the charming Miss Anne Ford and the erudite Miss Hancock, who recently have been in Washington calling upon the drama desks to plant seeds of thought regarding incoming vehicles for many of our better actors.

Mr. Herrick, who is given precedence over the ladies only by reason of his priority, came to herald the approach of "And Stars Remain," the first Theater Guild production of the season, in which Clifton Webb and Helen Gahagan will be seen in the National, beginning next Monday night.

Miss Ford, making her first local visit in some four or five years, brings inspiring tidings of the excellence of "End of Summer," in which Washington's own Ina Claire—and neither Miss Ford nor this column is sure whether that is pronounced "Eena" or "Eyena," although we shall continue to stick to the latter—and Osgood Perkins are to be seen on the National stage the week of October 12.

Miss Hancock, well ahead of her associate publicists in the matter of her cymbal-whanging, has in mind something of the superior quality that is to be expected of Arthur Hopkins' production of a new drama based on the life of Edgar Allan Poe, due at the National the week of October 26, with Henry Hull in the title role.

All of these auguries, it may be observed, are on the side of a thoughtful and worthy theater. To be sure, there is a keen need to be looked forward to in S. N. Behrman's "End of Summer," but, by and large, the present indications of the Capital's early season tend toward the worthier forms of dramatic creation and interpretation.

The return of Arthur Hopkins to the list of active producers is in itself an encouraging omen of the theater's recovery from its abysmal slump of the last decade. Mr. Hopkins is more or less in the nature of a symbol of the better things of the playhouse.

When he dedicates his efforts to anything as important as the life of Poe something pretty fine, indeed, is apt to come out of it. Especially since Henry Hull, escaped finally from the peculiar exactments of the role of Jeeter Lester, in "Tobacco Road," is to lend his talents to the fulfillment of a worthy theatrical ambition.

It is not only in the so-called "legitimate" theater that things are looking up. There comes to the desk Vol. 1, No. 1, of what evidently will be a continuous publication of a burlesque "house organ" bearing the title of "Burlesque Facts."

This is a well gotten up pamphlet, illustrated a little sensationally with intimate studies of some of the "smoker circuits" more prominent "display artists," in which are set forth the ambitions of the earnest gentlemen in charge of this particular—or not so very—type of theatrical entertainment.

It is, needless to say, a promulgation of the Independent Burlesque Association and names among its efficient directors that distinguished Beau Brummel of the sports arenas, Chesterfield of Ninth street and restaurateur de luxe, Mr. James Jeremiah Lake, impresario of the Gayety Theater. Mr. Lake and the rest of the boys, it seems, have brought burlesque, as they are pleased to spell it, back to a point where the circuit now extends from New York to Kansas City. Considering the fact that only a year or two ago such six weeks was the best that could be expected on this time, they have done a rousing good job in keeping pace with the major movements of the amusement world.

Tonight the drama unit of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, otherwise known as the "G-Men," are opening their season with a production of George S. Kaufman's play of "Merrily We Roll Along." A season or two ago this was looked upon as something a bit revolutionary in play-making, because it presented its developments backwards.

That is to say, it adopted the familiar method of the motion picture "cut-back" to reverse the chronological order of events. This was not entirely a new device thought up out of his own skull by Mr. Kaufman. It was done years ago by Elmer Rice in his play of "On Trial."

However, the experiment by the F. B. I. group will be an interesting one. It, at least, will afford the opportunity to toy with an unconventional form of dramaturgy and that always is interesting—especially when Broadway already has expressed a favorable verdict concerning the play involved.

Although a review appears elsewhere today on the topic of "My Man Godfrey," it is difficult to resist the temptation to repeat that here is one of the most amusing screen plays of the season. The introductory scenes—even including the main title and credits for the picture—are considerably jumbled and much too noisy, but they soon settle down into one of the most delightful expositions of the charming qualities of insanity these eyes and ears ever have contemplated. Set it by all means, and if you do not laugh yourself sick, see your favorite doctor immediately to determine why you are not ill of your hilarity!

We confess to a recent bad guess. "Anthony Adverse" is not going a third week at the Metropolitan, but not because it couldn't. The Warner management, under the local direction of John J. Payette, merely wishes to leave something of "box-office pull" in the thing to serve a useful purpose when the picture begins the inevitable round of the residential houses. It broke records at the Earle and Ambassador and piled up comforting grosses at the Met. There is still enough dramatic virulence left in the subject to do the same thing around the neighborhoods. That is the main idea.

I take leave to call attention to the fact that that steel framing for the new Translux Theater and office building on Fourteenth street, between New York avenue and H street, is rapidly taking shape. It won't be long now, but I suspect it may be longer than November 15.

If you would care to know, Jane Archer, a former Washingtonian and member of the Constance Connor Brown Studio of Theater Arts, is playing the role of Hortense Bertrand in "St. Helena," at the National; head coach Arthur "Dutch" Bergman and about 40 huskies from Catholic University's football squad will be guests of Carter Barron at Loew's Capitol tonight; a last minute change in personnel in "The Glorified Follies of 1936" coming into the Capitol on Friday replaces Once Odette and Bob Easton with Lewis and Ames; Leo Carrillo is about through with his tour of personal appearances and after his current week at the Earle will hasten back to the West Coast to make another picture for Columbia.

I-Told-You-So Note. Did New York win the first game of the World Series or did New York win the first game?

Guild Play Is Season's Next At the National

"And Stars Remain" Will
New Programs.

The second offering of the new season at the National Theater, beginning next Monday night, will be the Theater Guild's production of "And Stars Remain," by Julius J. and Philip G. Epstein, with Clifton Webb and Helen Gahagan cast in the costar roles. In the supporting cast will appear such noted players as Claudia Morgan, Charles Richman, Ben Smith, Mary Sargent, Suzanne Jackson, Richard Barbee and Edgar Kent. The play, which is appearing in Pittsburgh this week, was staged by Philip Moeller, the guild's art director. The locale of the play is in the exclusive Sutton place section of New York and the settings were designed by Aline Bernstein, who performed the same function for "Reunions in Vienna." The new play is said to possess a nice combination of comedy and drama. There will be the usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

"Give Me Your Heart," the Warner Brothers' production of Jay Mallory's stage play of "Sweet Aloes," will be the screen attraction at the Earle Theater beginning tomorrow, with Kay Francis in the role created on the boards by Evelyn Laye. The story is one of a distraught young mother, separated from her small son and trying to live down an unfortunate episode of her earlier life. George Brent, Henry Stephenson, Roland Young, Halliwell Hobbes, Patric Knowles and Frieda Inescourt are the foremost members of the supporting cast. The stage bill will be headlined by that foremost of modern tap dancers, Paul Draper, nephew of Ruth Draper, the international dancer. Others on the variety bill will include Roy Campbell's "Royalties," seven popular singers from the airwaves; Valentine Fox and Emelie Walters, ventriloquists, and Barbetta, novelty entertainer.

Wallace Beery, Elizabeth Patterson, Eric Linden, Cecilia Parker, Robert McWade, Donald Meek and others of distinguished attainment appear in the principal roles of "Old Hutch," the foremost screen feature of the bill announced for the week beginning tomorrow at Loew's Capitol Theater. These columns already have indicated something of the quaint humor, stirring drama and homely philosophy contained in this Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture. The new stage bill at the Capitol will be provided by the "Glorified Follies of 1936," a Ziegfeldian sort of revue, peopled by beauties who have appeared, at one time or another, in the foremost of the "old master's" productions.

Beginning today at the Little Theater, the attraction will be a revival of the film version of Victor Herbert's "Naughty Marietta," with Nelson Eddy and Jeannette MacDonald in the principal singing roles. The bill will be supported by short-reel subjects and newswreel.

The coming burlesque offering at the Gayety, beginning with the customary Sunday matinee, will be "Burlesque Stars of All Nations," featuring Margo Lopez, Nazario Hall and the amusing Walter Brown. The Gayety presents three shows daily, at noon, 2:30 and 8:15 p. m.

Having already enjoyed a successful F street week, "The Road to Glory," featuring Warner Baxter, Frederic March, Lionel Barrymore and June Lang, will return to the downtown sector tomorrow as chief screen feature of the bill at the Columbia. This wartime subject represents one of the finest productions of its kind in recent years.

"The Great Ziegfeld," the greatest musical spectacle ever to come out of Hollywood, as was to have been expected, will continue for another week at popular prices at Loew's Palace Theater. William Powell, Myrna Loy, Luise Rainer, Ray Bolger, Fannie Brice, Virginia Bruce and hundreds more continue to play.

The Kids Take Over 'Old Hutch'

The revival of "The Magnificent Obsession" continues the attraction at the Belasco Theater. Irene Dunne and the "earlier" Robert Taylor are foremost players in this widely acclaimed screen drama, already well and favorably known to Washington audiences.

With "Grand Hotel," the reopening attraction at the Rialto Theater, attracting large crowds daily, this celebrated M-G-M production, with Garbo, Lionel and John Barrymore, Joan Hershall, Lewis S. Stone, Wallace Beery, Joan Crawford and many more of the screen's eminences in the cast, will continue until "Cimarron" comes along to take its place. The 35-year-old newswreel also will be carried along.

Beginning today at the Little Theater, the attraction will be a revival of the film version of Victor Herbert's "Naughty Marietta," with Nelson Eddy and Jeannette MacDonald in the principal singing roles. The bill will be supported by short-reel subjects and newswreel.

The coming burlesque offering at the Gayety, beginning with the customary Sunday matinee, will be "Burlesque Stars of All Nations," featuring Margo Lopez, Nazario Hall and the amusing Walter Brown. The Gayety presents three shows daily, at noon, 2:30 and 8:15 p. m.

Sweet Revenge. EVERETT SLOANE, the red-headed agent in "Boy Meets Girl," went to see the premiere of "Bright Honor" Sunday night. Sloane, who had just received his salary, professed the cashier a $50 bill, said it was the smallest bill he had and asked for change. The box-office man refused to change it, explaining that there was an influx of counterfeit money, and that he wouldn't take the chance. The actor has to wait eight blocks before he could exchange the bill into smaller denominations. He then returned to the box office, again waited in line and purchased his $2.50 seat. Sloane believed his revenge by paying for his ticket with a stack of nickels and pennies.

Bases Full, Two Out: 40,000 Baseball Addicts Are Tense as Ripple Strikes Out

Here is a panoramic view of one of the tensest moments in yesterday's mud-splattered game at the Polo Grounds. It is the third inning and the Giants are trailing, 1 to 0. Jim Ripple, Giant centerfielder, strides to the plate, glances at the loaded sacks—and strikes out.

Giant Hurler Is Superman; Yankees Are Only Human

Twice the Terrymen Got Hits Trying to Duck Ruffing's Slants.

Run Scores on Each Yank Error

The Place Was Wet and Mr. Schacht Was Not Very Humorous.

By Westbrook Pegler.

New York, Sept. 30.—No matter how much bunting and band music, excitement, ceremony and suspense you lavish on a World-Series ball game, when the thing is done, you haven't seen a coronation or miracle. You have just seen a game of ball. The one which the Giants won from the Yankees this afternoon at the Polo Grounds, opening the festivities of 1936, was a swell demonstration of the best and worst there is in baseball.

The score, in the improbable event that you haven't heard by now, was 6 to 1. Carl Hubbell, that long, limber side-hill dodger from the Ozarks, was the superhero of the show, but he had his human moods notwithstanding. He balled as a man without emotions. And the Yankees, the champions of the American League by the greatest margin ever amassed, including the big years of Babe Ruth, had a few minutes in the eighth when they tossed the ball around in a manner to remind the barefoot boy in the pastures that the best are no better than the junior turnouts.

Duck—Get Hits.

For a fact—and you may look to the running stories of the World Series game for confirmation of this—the Yankees threw the ball away twice in about ten seconds in the eighth inning and a run scored on each loss. For another fact, in the third inning, two Giants got a hit against Red Ruffing, one of the greatest pitchers in the game at this writing, when they were actually bobbing and weaving to avoid being hit themselves. And in the same inning, Lou Gehrig—you must have heard of him—was hit on the bat by a pitched ball with the ball still on his shoulder and was out without much to spare.

Hubbell threw two men on base to retire the side, but when Carl himself came to bat as the next man up, in the Giants' half, his unavoidable path bounced over Ruffing's head and out to center for a single. Joe Moore then struck out and Dick Bartell, the Giants' shortstop, sent Hubbell to third with a hit that clattered off into right field as he stooped away from a pitch that was like to knock his head off. So the World Series is a great spiritual comfort to those Bathtubs, Baseball and Trickery.

Polar Grounds, New York, Sept. 30.—The Giants beat the Yankees in the fall swimming Olympics, and the winner needs Johnny Fisher, winner of the Garden City golf tournament for the underwater championship.

Avery Brundage suspended the wrong swimmer last summer when he dropped Eleanor Holm Jarrett. He should have suspended the Yankees.

The Yanks may not have spent the night before the battle drinking wine with Charlie MacArthur, but they couldn't have done any worse if they had.

Annette Kellermann used to eat a banana under water, but it remained for Carl Hubbell to eat a ball game that way.

It was really a submersion test instead of a World Series game, and while both pitchers did well with the Australian crawl stroke, it was Hubbell who proved that he could have stood in a barrel of water and pitched a bar of soap through a tropical hurricane without experiencing any difficulty with McCarthy's pachyderm.

Hubbell did everything the chorus girls used to do in the old Hippodrome tank spectacle, only a little better. And he came up just as dry.

The episode could have been titled "Fun in a Shower Bath," or "Through Murders' Row With Towel and Roof Cement."

Murders' Row may have been rowing, but they were using water wings for oars.

The game was as drab as a regatta in a fog and had all the color of a bridge game under a leaky tent up to the last half of the eighth, when the Yanks unraveled at the seams and went under like a sack of fatigues in a kiddie pool.

The Yanks got off to a good start when Selkirk made a homer and the first run of the game. After that they made but one threat and it was put down like a mutiny among the Russian commissars.

It was anybody's contest up to this point, with the weather leading on points under any scoring system. But here the Yanks did everything except skid out of the park.

With the bases full the Yankees resorted to strategy, not realizing that you can never get out of an overcrowded bathtub by trickery. They passed Mancuso to get at Whitehead with bases full.

But you can't make a wet baseball understand deep thinking and it is no time to suggest to a pitcher that he study Napoleon's tactical warfare when he is knee deep in a mud puddle.

Ruffing couldn't get that water-soaked pill over the plate for Whitehead and the proceedings changed from a ball game to a walkabout.

Presently Col. Ruffing's boys began booting the ball, knocking the infield with all the skill of a drunk at an egg-rolling contest. When the budge was pumped out and all hands ordered back on deck it was discovered that the score was Giants, 6; Yankees, 1.

Employe Sends Boss to Series

By the Associated Press.

Martinsville, Va., Sept. 30.—Because a thoughtful clerk "knocked down" petty cash for a year for her employer's benefit, Harry Nunn, Martinsville grocer, is in New York today to see the World Series.

Last year as the series between Detroit and Chicago drew to a close, Mrs. Dorsey Ramsey, the clerk, asked Mr. Nunn why he didn't save his money and attend the next series.

He might as well be at the games, she said, as spending all his time beside a radio.

"Oh, heck, I never could lay aside that much money just for baseball," he replied, and forgot the suggestion.

Early this week, Mrs. Ramsey handed him a bank book bearing his name and showing deposits of $143.50. She explained she had been taking 50 cents daily from un-checked pennies and small cash from the register and depositing it to the account of "World Series vacation for the boss."

Patty Berg Defeated; District Golfer Loses

By the Associated Press.

Summit, N. J., Sept. 30.—Mrs. Opal Hill, Kansas City veteran, regarded by many experts as America's uncrowned match play queen, ended the championship ambitions of 18-year-old Patty Berg today by beating the Minneapolis sensation, 4 and 3, as the field in the fourth United States Women's Golf tournament was reduced to eight quarter-finalists.

Mrs. Hill's smashing victory over the 1935 runner-up to Glenna Collett Vare and the pre-tournament favorite featured a two-round program which saw another Minneapolis youngster, Beatrice Barrett, grab part of the spotlight by eliminating the medalist, Estelle Lawson Page, of Chapel Hill, N. C., 2 and 1.

Patty's downfall, and "Beat" ascendancy both occurred in the third round.

Play in Key Rain.

Except for these developments, neither of which exactly was unexpected since Patty herself had remarked, "I don't expect to last long," and Miss Barrett for two years has been stamped "a corner," all of the ranking favorites survived the long dismal day, playing the afternoon in an icy, penetrating rain. Most of them, however, were extended by a combination of the elements and unexpected opposition.

Besides Mrs. Hill and Miss Barrett, others who gained the round of eight were Pamela (Pam) Barton, British champion, who will meet Miss Barrett tomorrow afternoon; Marion Miley, of Lexington, Ky.; Mrs. Carl H. Donner, of Springfield, N. J., former State medal play titlist; Mrs. W. E. Shepherd (nee Helen Lawson), of Los Angeles; Kathryn Hemphill, of Columbia, S. C.; and Maureen O'Connell, of Coral Gables, Fla. Mrs. Hill's next opponent.

Washington's last entry in the tournament, Helen Dettweiler, of Congressional Country Club, passed from the running in the second round this morning when she was defeated by Mrs. Crews, finalist in the 1927 tournament.

Wins Two Holes.

Miss Dettweiler, who was able to win only two holes from the Florida veteran—both of them on the inward nine—was defeated, 4 and 3. Mrs. Crews, playing steady golf, rolled up a four-hole lead as she rounded the turn in 41, only two strokes against par.

Miss Dettweiler rallied slightly on the start of the home nine. She missed the hole on the first, but she was able to win the hole on the second.

When the rain got heavy in the third inning, the faithful in the bleachers were allowed to move into the empty 5330 seats in the upper grandstand. Those who remained huddled under newspapers, adding a bright touch to the bleak scene. The only spectators left out in the rain were the boys who paid $5.00 for box seats.

A fan sent Burgess Whitehead, Giants' second baseman, a medal yesterday and said it had belonged to Marshal Foch during the World War. Whitehead wore it around his neck in today's game.

There was at least one proud spectator in the stands, Dick Bartell's mother was here from Alameda, Calif., and watched Dick tie the score with his homer in the fifth.

The major league tradition is that the players of one league mustn't talk to players of the other when they're on the field, but when the rain came down ten players from both teams crowded onto an eight-man bench in the bullpen and huddled "disconsolately" together throughout the game.

Tony Albano, of Brooklyn, the man who waited 12 days outside the park to be first to buy a bleacher ticket, was nowhere to be found inside. Hubbell said before the game he hoped the Giants wouldn't be at bat too long in any one inning. He was afraid his arm would get stiff. Among the autograph hunters in the park was Al Simmons, of the Tigers, who went around getting players of both teams to sign a new baseball. Col. Ruppert visited Joe McCarthy in the dugout before the game. McCarthy told him Monte Pearson, Yankee pitcher, will not pitch in the series because of his injured back. The score of the game would have been 5 to 1 instead of 6 to 1 if Burgess Whitehead had followed instructions from Pancho Snyder, Giants' third base coach, in the eighth inning. Snyder ordered Whitehead to stop at third instead of going in, but the former Cardinal kept going and scored.

Series Opener Hubbell, Mates In Gleeful Mood

By Paul Mickelson.

Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, Sept. 30.—Carl Hubbell, old "Chief Rain in the Face" himself, grinned and chuckled like a schoolboy who had just spelled down his teacher as his happy, mud-splattered Giant mates showered him with congratulations for throwing mud in the eyes of the fearsome Yankees.

First in the clubhouse, outfooting all his pals over the long spring from the diamond, the screwball genius from Meeker, Okla., hesitated by the doorway to act as "chief greeter."

"Did I clean the bases for you in sloppy weather?" he shouted as his pals rushed him.

"Clean 'em!" the Giants chorused, "you dirty cleaned 'em, especially in the eighth inning."

Through the cordon of Giants busted the great star with questions. Bill Terry started to pull off a shoe, squinted over in Hubbell's corner and came over.

"Say, what in hell's going on around here?" he yelled. "Oh, it's Hub. Well, fellows, he's the fellow to talk to. What a ball game he pitched. I'd like to order 95 of those a year in dry or wet weather."

Through the partition separating the Yankees and Giants nothing could be heard from the enemy camp as Hubbell quietly answered the questions.

"I was the worst wetaher I ever pitched in," he began as reporters milled and pushed to hear his soft-spoken words, "and I couldn't use all my stuff. The ball was pretty wet, but every time I got in a

Yanks, Giants Agree Weather Decided Tilt

By the United Press.

New York, Sept. 30.—It was a good game, this first engagement of the 1936 World Series, but the adverse weather was the big factor in deciding its outcome, it was agreed tonight by both the triumphant Giants and the losing Yankees in their dressing-room post-mortems.

"It's the pitcher that gets the break that wins in a game of that kind," said Screwballer Carl Hubbell, the winner. "And I got 'em, plenty of 'em. That line smash DiMaggio hit to Whitehead in the eighth was the big one, though."

"That nasty little drizzle had the pitching mound a quagmire. My spikes were so mud-caked I couldn't keep my balance. I pulled out of that hole in the eighth inning by feeding DiMaggio a screwball. Selkirk's home run came off one of those screwballs that went too high."

Powell Too Tough.

Asked about Jake Powell, who got three hits in his first three attempts, Hubbell said, "Hell, I just couldn't get that guy out."

Big Red Ruffing, Yankee pitching victim, agreed that the mud "was terrible."

"One time," he said, "I looked down and couldn't even see the sole of my shoe, much less my spikes. And they kept dumping that dry dirt on the surface, which made it all the gummiest and stickier. When a fast-ball pitcher like me does not have good, sure footing, it changes his whole delivery. I was sunk out there today. It was just one ball game, though. Lefty Gomez will take 'em tomorrow. He's right, but I sure hope it doesn't rain, 'cause it might queer him, too."

Giant Manager Bill Terry was elated. "Swell game, boys; thanks!" he yelled as the team trooped into the clubhouse.

"I thought Carl pitched a great game and I had all the confidence in the world he would come out on top."

Terry said he didn't care whether the game was called off or not, that he made no suggestions, leaving it all to the umpires to decide. However, his bad knee bothered him some. It was red and swollen all the way around as he undressed for his shower.

"I'm hoping it is going to be all

Leo Walper Shoots 147 to Win Place in P. G. A. Golf Trials

Bethesda Pro D.C.'s Only Qualifier

Cruikshank and Beach Make Grade as Cox, Mackenzie Fail.

By a Staff Correspondent.
Richmond, Va., Sept. 30.—Only one Washington professional, Leo Walper, Bethesda driving range instructor, qualified today in the National P. G. A. qualifying trials at James River course of the Country Club of Virginia.

Battling a driving wind and rain, Walper covered the water-logged course in 73-74-147 to finish two strokes back of the pacesetter, Wee Bobby Cruikshank, Country Club professional, who scored 71 and 74. Ralph Beach, of Suburban Country Club, Baltimore, captured the third qualifying place by virtue of his 71-79-149, almost knocking his chances for a loop with a ragged afternoon round.

These three will represent the Middle Atlantic sector in the National proper at Pinehurst, N. C., November 16-22.

25 Pros Compete.

A field of 25 competed today, but the scores soared due to the abnormal conditions.

Wifty Cox, Kenwood professional, looked upon as a sure qualifier, had his troubles and wound up with 78-76-154.

After taking 79 strokes in the morning, Roland Mackenzie, young Congressional pro, staged a spirited but futile rally in the afternoon, matching par with a 72 in the total. This put Mackenzie in fourth place. In the event one of the three qualifiers drops out, Mackenzie will move in as an alternate for the national championship.

Houghton Has 152.

Suddenly regaining his touch with nine holes to go, Mackenzie fired a 33, clipping three strokes off par, turning in the lowest nine of the day and eclipsing the great outgoing 34 posted by Beach in the morning.

At Houghton, unattached District professional, 1934 national P. G. A. quarter-finalist, was a stroke behind Mackenzie with a 152 total. Houghton leveled par with a 72 in the morning, being one shot behind the co-sharers of the lead, Cruikshank and Beach.

At the end of 27 holes, Houghton, with a 39, was still in the battle. He played the first three holes of the incoming nine in pretty fair fashion, but starting with the thirteenth he opened a streak of erratic putting which blew his score for the 18 holes to 80.

McL. Shorey, of East Potomac, scored 153; Cliff Spencer, Beaver Dam, 154; Bob Barnett, Chevy Chase, 155; Gene Yarkin, Woodmont, 155; Al Tredor, Manor, 159, and George Dittenbaugh, Indian Spring, picked up after taking an 82 in the morning.

In addition to winning a qualifying berth, Walper, Cruikshank and Beach won $50 each as part of a $150 purse put up by E. D. Hotchkiss, Jr., Richmond sportsman.

Walper's card and results follow:

tight fit, why I threw a screw ball. Only one pitch got away from me—the one I hit Gehrig with. I slipped just as I let her go. Selkirk? I threw him a screw ball, too, but it was a little too high and you know what happened to it. Powell was tough. I couldn't seem to get him out. I gave him the works, too. No, I didn't expect a shut-out anyway.

"Best game of ball ever pitched by anyone considering the weather," shouted little Gus Mancuso as he thumped Hubbell on the back. "Gosh, Hub, you were wonderful!"

As Terry limped around, displaying his bad left knee that started to swell like a balloon, he announced Hal Schumacher would pitch the second game against Lefty "El Goofy" Gomez, of the Yankees.

"I think Hal'll take care of them, too," predicted the Giant boss, "but we're not crowing about today's victory. Hubbell was greater in the clutch and we got the one big break of the game—in the eighth when he forced Di Maggio to hit into a double play."

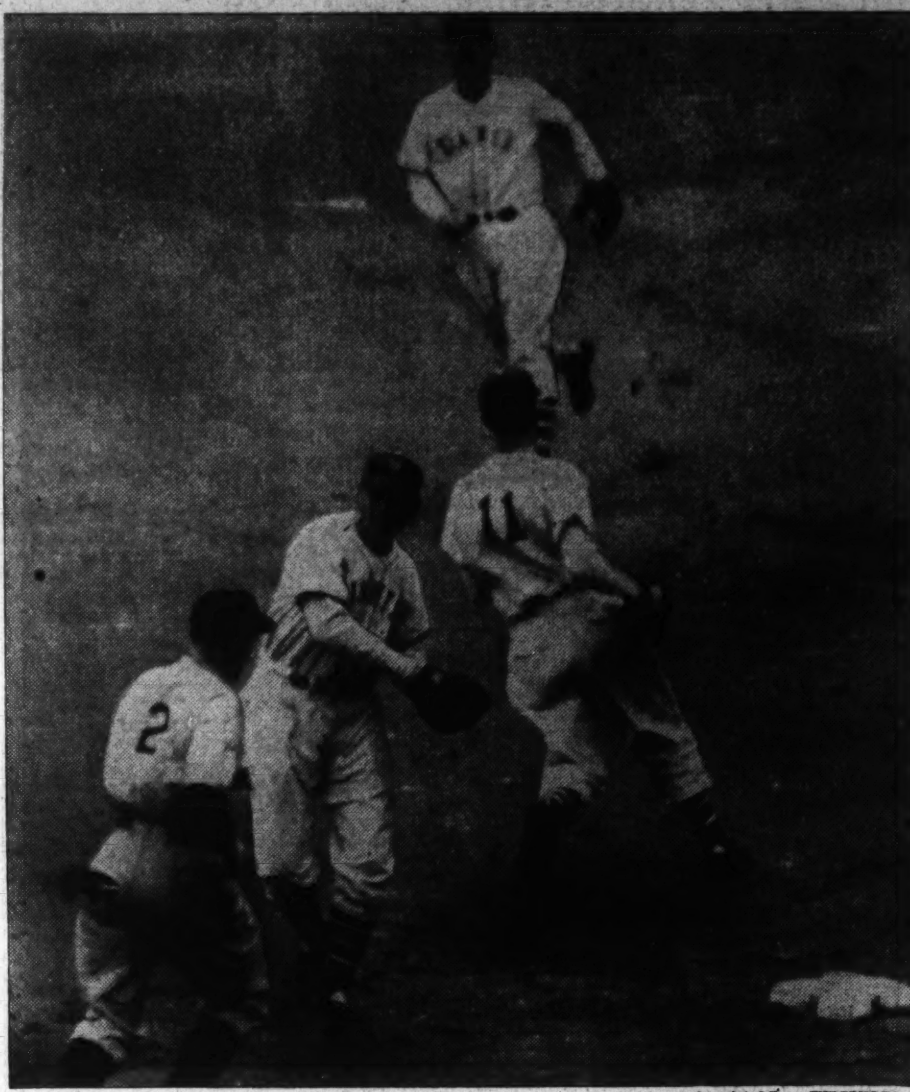

"You had time to nab Crossett for a triple play, why didn't you try for it?" Terry was asked.

"Tell you the truth I was a little too tickled. Anyway, we couldn't take a chance in throwing the ball away."

"Dick Bartell, the little fellow who put the Giants back in the game with his fifth-inning homer, said he hit a high curve."

Over in the Yankee dressingroom the gang was downcast but far from downhearted. Most of them sat around and smoked cigarettes in silence before getting their showers. Ruffing was far from sad as his mates streamed over to him, slapped him on the back and said, "Tough luck, Red."

Terry Retires Rolfe at First—"Unassisted"

Manager Bill Terry, of the New York Giants, retires Red Rolfe, Yankee third baseman, at first base in the first inning of yesterday's opening World Series game which the Giants won, 6-1. Carl Hubbell, Giant pitcher, with his back to the camera, and Second Baseman Burgess Whitehead, were around just in case Manager Bill did need a helping hand.

of us who wish to establish kinship to the truly great, even though we may only claim to share their weaknesses.

Nice Gesture.

The spectacle in the eighth inning was the most encouraging gesture toward the poor in heart that has occurred since the series of 1925 when Roger Peckinpaugh, of the Washington club, one of the greatest infallibles of baseball in his time, kicked off nine errors in the Pittsburgh series and lost his job. Today the score was 4 to 1 in favor of the Giants at the moment. Hubbell slapped one at Tony Lazzari and it splashed by him in the mud to be soaked up and hove back to the plate by Selkirk. The throw was wild and Bill Dickey went slogging after the ball heavy laden with his belly-armor and artificial shins. Dickey ketching the ball out of a puddle near the barrier and slung it back to the plate where it went past Ruffing. Gus Mancuso scored on the throw to Dickey and Burgess Whitehead, the Giants' second baseman, came in on Dickey's return through Ruffing.

But these were trimmings for the baseball contest was won by the margin of one run scored in the sixth. The count was even. Selkirk, of the Yanks, had hit a home run to right in the third and Dick Bartell, the Giants' shortstop, had hit one, a little higher and longer to the opposite side of the yard, in the fifth. So the game was decided in the sixth when Ott doubled, advanced on a sacrifice and scored on Mancuso's single.

Pomp and Such.

To me, and others, this sort of bookkeeping and backtracking always has the sound, the final report of an official receiver of a defunct title and trust company, so I am glad to desert from the technical details and beg leave the remark that the game was played on a rainy day which grew worse by the minute in the presence of a distinguished company.

There was a plane flying on high in the sky to wing an advertising streamer for one of the prominent night-life plants and seeming to stand still against the head wind. There was Al Schacht, one of the worst pitchers in the history of the great national game and one of the idiosyncratic comedians of our time, doing himself a single-handed ensemble in a battered plug hat and a Weber and Fields tailcoat on the base lines.

Mr. Schacht pitched for the Washington club 12 years ago and was promoted when they made him a clown. But he was a better clown when he was playing Hamlet than he is in the role of Puck.

Puck on Both Sides.

Puck was playing on both sides of the World Series ball game. Here were Lou Gehrig, next to Babe Ruth the greatest hitter in the history of baseball, and Bill Dickey, the Yankees' catcher, with a season's rating above Gehrig's, without a hit against the head wind. And here were Hubbell with two hits, Hubbell who couldn't hit a pig with a pole, and this Jake Powell, of the Yankees, a dollar-a-day ball player, with three hits, the mostest hits of all.

And George Selkirk, a man who just happened by this season, hit a homer for the only run the Yankees got. Hubbell fooled the Selkirk man with a drooping curve in the third inning on the first ball thrown. Then the Arkansawyer tried that one again and the ball left the park in a hoisting flight to the upper tier for the only run the Yankees got.

New York, Sept. 30.

It was just like that Jake Powell to swagger up there to the plate at the Polo Grounds this afternoon in his first World Series game and collect more hits than any of the high-priced sluggers on either team. And it mattered not to Powell that he and other run-of-the-mine hitters were supposed to roll over and play dead against the invincible pitching of the great Carl Hubbell, no, indeed, it did not.

PÖVICH.

For best known, the brash young man from the Washington sandlots holds absolutely no respect for the reputation of Hubbell or any other pitcher. As far as he's concerned, the best pitcher is only human and as long as they let Jake swing a bat, why, Jake is very likely to belt out a hit.

It's a philosophy peculiar to athletes with more than their share of ego, and Jake's one of them. Dizzy Dean's another and Pepper Martin's another. At that, it's probably no more ego than it is supreme self-confidence. You know the type. Well, Jake's one of 'em.

The former Washington golfer, George Voigt, was of that ilk. Voigt, who discarded his job as a typewriter repairman in the United States Treasury Department to take up golf seriously and make four Walker Cup teams, was, like Powell, never troubled by any doubts of his own ability.

And Jake Powell wouldn't know a mental hazard if it took life and socked him in the mouth. He just isn't bothered about thinking of things like that. His imagination will never play hob with Jake's equilibrium because Jake doesn't speculate much.

So when the great Hubbell wound up out there on the mound in the second inning this afternoon, Powell was untroubled by the fact that not a hit had been made against the greatest pitcher in baseball. Jake worked the count to three and two and then crashed a single to center.

One hit might be a creditable showing against the great Hubbell, but not for Jake. So, in the fourth inning, Jake intercepted a screwball with the lumber he had on his shoulder and whammed another line drive into leftfield.

It had all the earmarks of a single, but when Joe Moore failed to come up with the ball cleanly and wasted that split second in getting it away, why, nothing but two bases would suffice Powell who galloped into second like a deer on the loose.

Well, that was pretty good—two hits in two times at bat for Jake, but there wasn't any reason why he should let it go at that, so in the seventh inning he calmly pounded a curve ball into leftfield for his third straight hit and whomever is this guy Hubbell, anyway?

Hubbell did get Jake out on an infield grounder in the last inning. Jake probably never will understand that.

Looking Backward.
Lou Gehrig's hitting against Hubbell today, if laid end to end, wouldn't reach to second base... he grounded out to Hubbell in front of the plate once and grounded to Terry once... He struck out and was hit by a pitched ball... Hubbell didn't even bother to look at that ball off Selkirk's bat as it streaked into the rightfield stands in the third inning... apparently he has a great ear for home runs... Manager Joe McCarthy's faith in his sluggers is certainly wonderful... which is more than can be said for his strategy in the seventh inning... when with the Yankees trailing, 2 to 1, Powell on first and none out, he deigned not to order Lazzari to lay down a sacrifice bunt... Lazzari, up there swinging, struck out... Joe DiMaggio is entitled to ask what a guy has to do to make an important base hit... in the All-Star game at Boston, the young Italian was robbed of a hit with the winning runs on base when Shortstop Durocher caught his murderous line drive.

Rain Halts Chicago's 21st City Championship
Chicago, Sept. 30 (AP)—Rain kept the Chicago White Sox and Cubs from opening the twenty-first city championship baseball series today.

The series, a best four-out-of-seven affair, will open tomorrow in the Cubs' park, but the second game will be played at Comiskey Park, home of the White Sox.

Patty Berg Out In Women's Golf Play

Willoughby, Ohio, runner up to Dorothy Campbell Hurd in 1924, 5 and 4 in the morning, while Patty stuck close to par figures in crushing Mrs. Wright D. Goss, Jr., of Springfield, N. J., finalist a decade ago, 6 and 4. Out in 38, one under par, Miss Berg was only two over par for the 14 holes the match lasted.

On the basis of Patty's showing, her best in the tournament, Mrs. Hill wasn't given much chance before the match, especially when the rain came down in sheets shortly after noon. But the conditions couldn't daunt the mother of several children, one of whom is older than Miss Berg.

Mrs. Hill Shoots 29.

In a remarkable, machine-like performance, that had only one lapse, Mrs. Hill shot the outgoing game in par 39 to stand 5 up on the freckle-faced little girl. She had 7 pars, one birdie and a bogey 5 on the ninth hole. Patty, out in 44, just wasn't hitting the ball, being short on almost every approach to the greens. Mrs. Hill caught Patty's erratic fever on the second nine, although she never was in danger of losing her advantage.

Mrs. Hill went 6 up, winning the 152-yard tenth with a bogey 4 and then Patty won back two holes, the eleventh and twelfth, taking advantage of Mrs. Hill's putting lapses. They halved the next three holes, the match ending on the fifteenth green as both carded par 55.

The other quarter-finalists advanced as follows:
Miss Barrett defeated Katherine Sylvester, Harrison, N. Y., 5 and 3, and then Mrs. Page; Miss Barton defeated Mrs. Thomas Rudel, Bay-side, N. Y., 2 and 1, and Mrs. Norman Lack, of Wilmington, Del., 2 and 1. Miss Miley defeated Patricia Stephenson, of Hopkins, Minn., who scored a hole-in-one on the 152-yard tenth, 2 up, and Charlotte Glutting, of South Orange, N. J., 1 up at the nineteenth hole. Mrs. Donner defeated her arch Jersey rival, Mrs. William Hockenjos, of West Orange, 3 and 1, and Jane Cothran, Greenville, S. C., 1 up at the twenty-first hole.

Tomorrow's round of eight will start at 1:15 p. m. (Eastern standard time) with the following pairings:
Miss Barrett vs. Miss Barton; Miss Miley vs. Mrs. Donner; Mrs. Shepherd vs. Miss Hemphill, and Mrs. Hill vs. Mrs. Crews.

Play-by-Play of First Game

Gehrig's head on the first pitch, sending Hubbell to third. Terry fouled to Dickey, who made the catch in front of the Yankees' dugout.

Ott walked, the fourth straight ball being low and inside. The bases were filled.

It was raining hard. Rippe fanned swinging, after Umpire Pfrman announced the count was two balls instead of three.

The mix-up on balls called against Rippe was due to a pitch made when Rippe was out of the batter's box.

FOURTH INNING.
Yankees.
Dickey fanned without getting his bat off his shoulder.

Powell tried to bunt and fouled into the dirt. Powell got his second straight hit on a line smash to left that he made good for two bases by fast running.

Mancuso and Terry conferred with Hubbell in the box.

Lazzari walked, the fourth ball being low.

Selkirk fanned swinging at another curve.

No runs, one hit.

GIANTS.
It was pouring hard. The bleacher spectators were permitted to leave the open and seek cover in the unoccupied sections of the upper stands. The plate was given a new coating of whitewash. The base lines were getting muddy.

Mancuso lifted a high one to Rolfe on the first pitch.

Whitehead fanned swinging at a fast ball.

FIFTH INNING.
Yankees.
Send was sprinkled around the pitcher's box to help provide firmer footing.

Ruffing fanned swinging.

Crossett lifted a high foul to Mancuso.

Rolfe popped to Whitehead.

No runs, no hit.

GIANTS.
Hubbell grounded out, Lazzari to Gehrig.

Moore popped a foul to Dickey on the first pitch. The Yankees caught a made a nice running catch near his own dugout.

Bartell hit a home run into the upper left field stands, tying the score, and sending the crowd into a wild outburst of cheering. It was a line drive that was about six feet inside the foul line.

Terry grounded out, Lazzari to Gehrig.

SIXTH INNING.
Yankees.
DiMaggio fanned swinging at a screw ball.

Gehrig fanned, swinging at a slow curve.

Dickey grounded out to Terry unassisted.

No runs, no hits.

GIANTS.
Ott poked a two-bagger against the leftfield wall, connecting with a slow ball.

Rippe bunted and was tossed out, Ruffing to Lazzari. Ott went to third on the sacrifice.

Ruffing had to kick the mud off his cleats after every pitch.

Mancuso lashed a hit down the leftfield line for a single, scoring Ott and putting the Giants in front for the first time. Fast fielding by Powell kept the backstop from trying to make two bases on the blow.

Whitehead popped to Rolfe, who ran in to make the catch a few feet in front of the plate.

Jackson lifted a high fly to DiMaggio.

SEVENTH INNING.
Yankees.
The entire infield was a mass of mud. The rain did not show the slightest signs of abatement. The umpires looked the ground conditions over while Hubbell warmed up but there was no attempt to halt the play. It had taken nearly two hours to complete six innings under the worse series conditions in ten years.

Powell hit the first pitch to left for his first straight hit.

Lazzari fanned, swinging at a screw ball. He was Hubbell's seventh victim.

Selkirk grounded to Terry and Powell was forced at second. Terry to Bartell. There was no attempt for a double play.

Ruffing fanned, swinging with the count three and two and the crowd gave Hubbell another big hand. No runs, one hit, no errors.

GIANTS.
Hubbell rolled to Gehrig. Moore belted a long fly to DiMaggio. Bartell hoisted a high foul to Dickey.

No runs, no hits, no errors.

YANKEES.
Eighth inning—Crossett lashed a double down the third-base line. It was a close play at second base as Bartell lunged at Crossett after taking Moore's great throw. It looked as though Crossett slipped past the bag in the mud, but Umpire Magerkurh called him safe. Time was called while Turkish towels were used for mopping up purposes.

Rolfe's bunt was fumbled by Hubbell and the batsman reached first safely, while Crossett ran to third.

DiMaggio lined to Whitehead and Rolfe was doubled off first. Whitehead to Terry. Whitehead plucked the ball off his shoetops. Crossett remained at third.

Gehrig was hit on the shoulder by a pitched ball. The Yankee captain barely avoided being beamed.

No runs, one hit, one error.

GIANTS.
Terry lashed a single to right center. Ott bunted along the first-base line and turned it into a base hit as he caught the Yankees' flat-footed. Terry stopped at second.

Rippe bunted down the third-base line and was tossed out, Rolfe to Gehrig. Terry went to third and Ott reached second on the sacrifice.

Mancuso was intentionally placed to fill the bases. Whitehead walked, the fourth ball being low, forcing Terry across the plate and leaving the bases loaded. Jackson lifted a high fly to DiMaggio. Ott, scoring after the catch, Whitehead and Mancuso held their bases. Hubbell's grounder bounced away from Lazzari and Mancuso scored. Whitehead then ran all the way home, and Hubbell reached third when Crossett's throw to the plate got away from Dickey. Moore was thrown out on a fast play. Crossett to Gehrig. Four runs, three hits, two errors.

Ninth inning—Powell was thrown out, Bartell to Terry. Lazzari grounded out, Whitehead to Terry. Selkirk was thrown out, Whitehead to Terry. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Master Wins $10,000 Graw Handicap; Discovery Fails

Win Is Worth $10,000 to Owner

Discovery Just Isn't Good Enough in Final Day's Feature.

By Walter Haight.

Hayre de Grace, Md., Sept. 30.—Discovery had "no excuses" today. Competing in a field of eight seeking the chief money in the $10,000 added Hayre de Grace Handicap, the Vanderbilt stable's "big trail" could do no better than finish fifth as Roman Soldier, Elwood Sachsenmaier's colt, splashed to victory in the mile-and-a-furlong closing day feature at this track. The winner had a four-length advantage over A. Pelletier's Whereaway. The ancient Dark Hope, owned by J. W. Y. Martin, was a third favorite. Mrs. E. Denemark's Corinto fourth.

Although the race was run over a sloppy track, the rains that had marked the afternoon ceased just before the big race and the crowd of 10,000 could find nothing that interfered with Discovery. He was not "knocked down" at the break. He was not crowded at the turn. He was not crowded at the finish. He was not crowded at the finish. He was not crowded at the finish.

Roman Soldier Pays $15. Roman Soldier, which demonstrated his fitness in a warm-up victory here earlier in the meeting, was third choice in the betting and paid a $15.00 to $1.00. He was a third choice in the betting and paid a $15.00 to $1.00. He was a third choice in the betting and paid a $15.00 to $1.00.

After a short delay at the post, Roman Soldier and Dark Hope bounded out to battle for the place setting honors. First one and then the other showed in front as they bounded along the sloppy track.

Discovery, in charge of Jockey Belshak, was closer than usual, being in fourth position, some seven lengths from the leaders. The crowd waited for his "move" as the group went into the far turn, but the display horse did not change his stride.

Roman Soldier finally shook off Dark Hope gradually to open some daylight in the early stretch. Whereaway took the place setting. Discovery seemed to rally for a moment, but dropped back again. Roman Soldier continued to draw away through the stretch and Whereaway held the now tiring Dark Hope safe.

The victory brought $8,500 to Owner Sachsenmaier and increased Roman Soldier's earnings for the year to $19,875.

Ral Pals' Fleeting Moon, a daughter of the mud-running Flyer Ebony, bounded over a sloppy track to win the first race. With Apprentice Jockey Le Blanc in the saddle, the filly shook off early challengers of Guy Fawkes and went on to win by two and a half lengths from Savage, the favorite, from the Vanderbilt Stable. Triple Action came from back in the field to be third. The winner paid an $8.20 mutuel and ran the 5 1/2 furlongs in 1:07.

Grey Streak Pays $14.

Grey Streak, a $14.10 shot from the Milldale Stable, scored a long victory over Mrs. E. Denemark's Flavour in the second race, another 6-furlong sprint. Showing a liking for the sloppy track, the Pompey gelding forged to the front after a quarter but had to be ridden into submission to stay there. Third money, in the field of a dozen, went to Acutaw, the favorite, Grey Streak ran the route in 1:13.5, good time under the conditions.

Moon Side, gelded son of Broad-side, won the fourth race in the colors of E. Kane. Ridden by Jockey L. Coffman, Moon Side splashed over the finish line two lengths ahead of Scatter Brain, with Count Rae of the Denemark entry in third position. Moon Side took command in the run to the clubhouse turn and, after being headed momentarily by Count Rae on the swing for the stretch, drew clear in the closing stages. Moon Side kept the string of longshots intact by paying an $18 mutuel, running the mile and 70 yards in 1:44.2-5.

10,000 to See Leemans and Giants Face All-Stars Here Tonight

Star Injured, Determined To Play

Pixlee Makes Gadget to Protect Gash; Game Is Set for 8 P. M.

"Tuffy" Leemans, the greatest football player in the history of George Washington University, came home yesterday afternoon to the warm greetings of his bride-to-be, Miss Theodora Rinaldi, and a group of intimate friends. But Tuffy probably will feel more at home tonight on the lime-ribbed gridiron of Griffith Stadium, where he will perform with the New York Giants against the College All-Stars.

The opening kick-off is scheduled for 8 o'clock and only the collapse of the grandstand or a triple-X special hurricane will prevent the game from being played.

At least 10,000 fans are expected to extend Tuffy a royal welcome home. A heavy sale of box seats, despite the inclement weather of the past two days, presages a good turnout.

To Play Anyway

Leemans will play tonight against the orders of the New York club's physician, who wanted the former Colonial flash to idle on the bench a week because of a bad gash inside the cheek. But Tuffy, determined to play at all costs, wired Coach Jim Pixlee, of George Washington, asking him to make a special face protector to fit his helmet.

"I've really got my heart and soul on playing this game," Tuffy said last night, "and I'm going to be in there if they have to carry me on the field on a stretcher."

Elaborate ceremonies have been planned for tonight. Leon Bruloff, new director of the George Washington University Band, will lead his men on the field and Pixlee will extend an official "welcome home" to his former pupil. There will be other ceremonies similar to those preceding the All-Star games in Chicago and New York also.

Gift to Leemans

Michael Rinaldi, local sportsman and businessman who is promoting the game, announced yesterday that any profits from the game will be given to Tuffy as a wedding gift. Leemans spent a busy night following his arrival, being interviewed by Jack Espey over Station WOL and later by "Buck" O'Neill over Station WJVS. His teammates are scheduled to arrive at 6 p. m. today and will leave immediately after the game. Sunday, the Giants play the Boston Redskins, and George Marshall, president of the latter club, will be in the stands tonight scouting his boys' future opponents.

The Washington eleven completed preparations for the first fray with a light drill last night and are in rare shape for the contest.

Weather Decides Opener of Series right, though," he laughed. "But one lamp day that I played in Philadelphia nearly kept me in bed the next day. I thought Ruffing pitched a mighty good game in spite of bad weather in the evening. I am going to put Schumacher in there against 'em tomorrow."

Joe McCarthy, stubby manager of the Yanks, took the defeat stoically. "It wasn't a fair test for either team, but it wasn't any tougher on us than it was on them. It was just one out of seven and tomorrow's another day," he said, reiterating his intention of starting Gomez.

"Big Lou Gehrig leading slugging of the majors, who didn't get a hit off Mr. Hubbell's slants, sat silently before his locker puffing a pipe and swigging a bottle of beer for 10 or 15 minutes after the game. In answer to this correspondent's query, "What Hubbell had on the ball?" Gehrig questioningly replied, "Didn't you see it? I didn't have much luck getting my eyes on it."

Joe DiMaggio, whose eighth-inning line smash to Whitehead was converted into a double play which changed the tide of battle, thought he had a hit because that ball was really tagged."

Jane Osborn Qualifies As an Expert Rifleman

Jane Osborn, 412 A street southeast, has qualified as an expert rifleman in the junior division of the National Rifle Association. It was announced here today. The only grade higher than expert is distinguished rifleman.

Of a total of 41,853 junior shooters of the country who have qualified so far this year in all grades of shooting proficiency from the beginning grade of novice to the highest grade of distinguished rifleman, only 62 have succeeded in attaining the distinguished rating and 335 the expert rating.

Washington Gun Club Starts Fall Competition

The Washington Gun Club will hold its first fall championship competition next Saturday at the Benning butte, when its members vie for the 50-target double medal, in which three prizes will be allotted according to the Lewis Class system. The weekly 25-target contest for legs on the Hunter-Wilson trophies will complete the program.

Trojans Take Two

The Trojan A. C. congratulated itself yesterday on its double defeat of the Baynesville Club, of near Baltimore. The Trojans defeated the Maryland team in a double-header, 9-2 and 5-3. Previously the strong Baynesville outfit had dropped but two contests this season.

Loew's to Fete C. U. Squad

fell 12,000 shy of the park's 52,000 capacity. The day's receipts totaled $172,000.

Spurning the pitching strategy that many have called for, Manager Joe McCarthy of the Yankees flung Big Charley Ruffing into the teeth of the Terrymen rather than save his first-pitcher for a game in which he would not oppose the talented Hubbell.

But on a day apparently tailor-made for Ruffing's fast ball, the big right-hander faded after four innings. Nine hits the supposedly weak-hitting Giants rattled against his delivery with Hubbell, himself, partaking in the assault with two singles.

In his first World Series engagement, Washington's Jake Powell, the irrepressible product of the Takoma Park sandlots was a heroic figure in a losing cause. Three of the seven Yankee hits rocketed off the bat of the former Nat who was traded to the Yanks in midseason.

It was Powell, calmly ignoring Hubbell's reputation, who authored the first hit off the Giant's south-paw—a leashing single to center-field in the second inning. His first three times at bat saw Powell bash out clean drives and take over the series batting lead at the end of the game.

Into a Hubbell screw ball Powell lunged in the fourth inning to thump a lousy double to leftfield and cleanly over Third Baseman Jackson's head. He singled in the seventh inning.

Promptly at 2:15 o'clock George Selkirk, belting his station next to the pitcher in the Yankees' batting order, banged this third-inning home run into the rightfield pavilion to give the Yankees their brief 1-0 lead.

But the Giants blessed by their traditional luck escaped further damage in the inning after Rolfe and DiMaggio pounded singles to rightfield with two out. With the terrifying figure of Gehrig at the plate, the Giants ultimately saw him go out harmlessly—while trying to duck a high inside pitch which bounced from his bat into the glove of Hubbell.

In the same inning the Giants sadly muffed a glowing chance to tie the score after Hubbell led off with a single to center and reached third with one out when Bartell drove a single to right. But in this emergency Ruffing disposed of Manager Terry on a foul pop to Dickey and struck out Jim Rippie.

All of a sudden the Giants tied the score at 1-1 in the sixth when Bartell, with two out, rammed his home run into leftfield and taking heart at that, Hubbell struck out two Yankees in the sixth.

Back to bat came the Giants to set Hubbell up in a 2-1 lead when Mel Ott, the boy wonder of a decade ago, pushed a double into rightfield, went to third on Rippie's sacrifice and scored on a single provided by Gus Mancuso.

Jake Powell put the tying run on base for the Yanks in the seventh with his third straight hit, a single to right, but he never reached second, what with Hubbell striking out Lazzeri and Ruffing and disposing of Selkirk on a force play.

But the Giants' one-run lead tottered precariously in the eighth

Kampher Faces Dusek on Mat Tonight

Olson to Wrestle Koverly in Semifinal; Three Other Bouts Listed.

Rudy Dusek returns to the local wrestling wars tonight in the featured bout of Promoter Joe Turner's weekly five-bout card at the Arena. The first bout gets under way promptly at 8:30 o'clock.

Rudy has drawn the German sensation, Hans Kampher, who has topped three straight foes in semi-final roles for this fall-to-a-finish match.

The semifinal tonight has been shortened to 30 minutes, due to the expected length of the feature. The event finds Cliff Olson and George Koverly, the "Madman of Maidom," clashing in what should be one of the roughest bouts of the season.

Three 30-minute time-limit scraps round out the bill, and features the initial appearance of Stan Sokolis, former University of Penn. grid star, here. Sokolis is matched with Harry Finkelstein and, if he makes good early promises of greatness, will be given more formidable opponents in the future.

"Irish" Jack Donovan and Ed Cook tangle in another 30-minute go while Ole Anderson and Mike Mazurki open the show.

Idle Outfielders

Repeat 1921 Feat

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Sept. 30.—World Series history strangely repeated itself after 15 years this afternoon at the Polo Grounds when the Giants' outfielders failed to make a put-out behind the pitching of Carl Hubbell.

Back on October 5, 1921, it was also a Giant team, playing on the same grounds, which first established the unique record for inactivity by outfielders in World Series play, behind the pitching of Phil Douglas.

And then, too, it was a team of Yankee hitters that the Giants were facing.

Alvin Crowder Wed.

when Frank Crosetti whacked a double past third base to start proceedings. In horror Giant adherents then saw Hubbell mess up a bunt by Rolfe that put runners on first and third with one out.

And then the superb defense that carried the Giants to their pennant triumph made a timely entry. Off the bat of Joe DiMaggio, black-headed Burgess Whitehead grabbed a scorching line drive and rifled it to Terry at first to double Rolfe before that young man could get back to the bag.

Hubbell, thus over the big hump, hit Gehrig on the back, but retired Dickey on a soft grounder to Terry. Came the Giant's eighth and the pitiable collapse of the American League champions.

Colonials, Terps Scrimmage; Hogge Star

Maryland Devotes Work-out to Perfecting Its Defense for V. P. I.

A lengthy scrimmage between George Washington and Maryland on the wet and skiddy turf at College Park featured local college football practices yesterday as the teams prepared for another weekend of the old Roman pastime. All teams, excepting Gallaudet, will see action.

The work of Elmer Hogge, rookie fullback, was the high spot of the Colonials' drill and the big fellow made a lasting impression on Coach Jim Pixlee, who still is seeking a regular line-up. Hogge may be assigned to a place in the starting backfield against Elon tomorrow night.

Maryland devoted the better part of the afternoon to perfecting a defense, a phase of the game that the Terps seem to be weak in. Saturday's fray with V. P. I. will mark Maryland's conference debut, and it is an important game in more ways than one. The Terps, for instance, must win to even the lengthy series between the schools at 11-11, which is not tasteless. It also is the first of ten major battles for Maryland.

Dress rehearsal was the order of the day at Catholic University, although the boys remained indoors for maneuvers. Coach "Dutch" Bergman's starting line-up for Saturday's opener with Shenandoah will be Brown and Capt. Schmarr, ends; Clements and Katalinas, tackles; Arnold and Anthonavage, guards; Yanchulis, center; Foley, quarterback; Carroll and Adamatis, halves, and Orth, fullback.

Pedro Is Not Fit Football Mascot, So He Is Tanked

By the Associated Press.

Cincinnati, Sept. 30.—Pedro, the sea lion, swam around in circles in a Cincinnati Zoo tank today unimpressed by a demolition from mascot of the University of Dayton Football Team.

Information Director Ned Hastings said the zoo welcomed Pedro in the dusk of early evening when four Dayton men brought the sea lion in the rumble seat of an automobile.

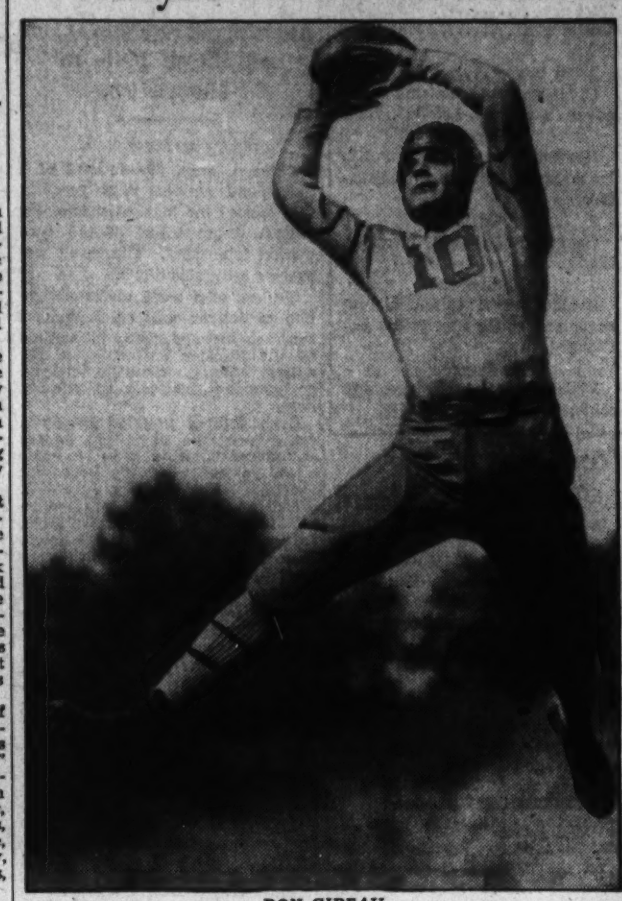

They told the keepers Pedro had been given to the university by an alumnus who believed a sea lion would make an excellent mascot. But the alumnus reckoned not on the whims and fancies of a sea lion. The bill for fish was bad enough, what with Pedro devouring 15 or 20 pounds a day. But when the sea lion started barking so loudly at night that it disturbed the sleep of students, faculty and residents, that was too much.

Pedro was benched—or tanked.

Gibeau Is Expected to Give Hoya Fans Thrills This Fall

DON GIBEAU.

Now that everybody but the president of the university has hailed as the greatest football player ever enrolled at Georgetown and the lad to watch this year, it may be well to mention that Don Gibeau also will be on the squad. Gibeau, a senior, we might add, is a half-back by calling, and the coaches are in the habit of calling on him quite frequently.

But if all others have overlooked the raven-haired Frenchman with the rubbery legs, Head Coach Jack Hagerty hasn't, and he looks to Gibeau to carry the mail when his other backs can't get through, which is all too often. Gibeau, despite his size, or lack of it, has the peculiar knack of gaining where no one gained before, and of filling his teammates with a frenzied fury that often has turned the tide of battle and swept Hilltoppers back from the brink of defeat to the heights of victory.

Too small to attain the prominence that others have gained, the boy nevertheless must be reckoned one of Georgetown's best and scrappiest football men of all time. Tie three strange, half-starved wildcats in a bag, let it go, and you have some idea of Gibeau in action. "Can't last" in his vocabulary and as for "quit," well, he no speaks da Anglish.

Up in the big town New York University and Manhattan know him well, for more than once have the burly Violet and Jasper stars felt themselves moving uncommonly fast in reverse, propelled by an unstoppable force wrapped in the Blue and Gray yards of Georgetown. It was Gibeau, of course, putting a block on an opponent. Or, they may have felt someone seize them from behind by the scruff of the neck or by their very heels, whirl them around and dump them unceremoniously on the flat of their backs. Nothing alarming, if a bit painful. Merely Gibeau making a tackle.

Five feet 10 inches sans socks, with 150 pounds draped over his frame, the youngster is acknowledged the best pass receiver on the squad, a well-deserved honor attributable to his basket-ball experience in the court game Gibeau is tops. In fact he is usually on top, of course, but effective. The boy figures to be one of Georgetown's.

Heurichs Post $500 Bet on G-Men Series

A $500 side bet has been posted by the Heurichs Brewers just to "make it interesting enough" for the Bureau of Investigation to play them a three-game series for the District sandlot baseball title.

The Brewers recently won the Sunday League title, while the Sleuths took the week-day crown. It was a member of the Bureau nine who goaded the Heurich club's management to post the $500. When approached by a Heurich player about a possible series between the two clubs, one of the Sleuths jokingly said: "Put up a couple of hundred bucks on the game and maybe we'd consider playing."

5th Little World Series Game Is Delayed by Rain

Steel Orders Rise Sharply In September

Highest Month's Tonnage Since 1930 Exceeds August 25 to 50%.

Steel companies booked from 25 to 50 per cent more tonnage in September than in August, establishing the past month as possibly the best of the year, says Iron Age in its weekly summary yesterday. The review adds: "Production schedules have been stepped up in nearly all districts, the average for the country being estimated at 75 per cent, highest since the spring of 1930. Sharp gains in output have occurred in the Cleveland-Lorain district, which is at 80 per cent, against 74 per cent last week; in the Youngstown district, which has risen from 76 to 82 per cent; at Pittsburgh, which is up to 74 per cent from 72, and in the Ohio River district, which has jumped from 85 to 92 per cent. Elsewhere the trend is steady, except at Detroit and St. Louis, where slight declines have occurred.

"Large bookings of sheets, with the automobile industry again a leading buyer, have placed sheet mills in virtually a sold-up condition for the fourth quarter. On some grades deliveries now quoted extend into December, and automobile companies have made reservations for January rolling, with price in effect at that time to govern. Some mills are out of the market, on light gage hot-rolled annealed sheets for the fourth quarter and are turning down proffered business. Hot rolled bars have also been in large demand. Some of the buying of these products has been to escape the $2 a ton price advance in effect October 1, but a good deal of tonnage has also been taken at the new quotations.

Export Demand.

In addition to an active domestic business, mills are enjoying a spurt in export demand, which has been brought about largely because of the inability of British and German mills to make deliveries short of three months or more. Business has come not only from the usual sources of export trade—South America and Central America—but also in increasing amounts from European countries. American export prices for bars, shapes and plates have been increased and are now $4 a ton above quotations ruling early in the year. Sheets are being sold in some foreign markets at full domestic prices, plus freight and other charges.

"With increasing business from nearly all sources excepting possibly the construction field, steel mills expect continued difficulties in satisfying customers on deliveries. The situation would be further complicated by freight car shortages, which are likely if car loadings, now approaching 800,000 a week, should climb much higher."

Baker Named Head Of American Can Co.

New York, Sept. 30 (AP)—H. A. Baker, vice president of American Can Co., was elected president of the company to succeed C. G. Greer, who resigned because of ill health, the board of directors announced today.

Baker rose to his present position in the $43,000,000 can manufacturing concern through the chemical laboratories and sales department of the company. A graduate in 1906 from the University of Toronto, he was awarded the honorary degree of doctor of science at Colgate University in 1923 for scientific contributions improving laboratory methods of food canning.

Akron, Ohio, Sept. 30.—Plans for entering the mechanical rubber goods industry, with the opening of a plant in Wabash, Ind., where production will be under way by the first of 1937, were announced today by the General Tire and Rubber Co. at Akron.

Company officials said that they expected to exercise in a few days an option on the office and factory building of the Relay Motors Co. in Wabash. The plant site covers about 300 acres and the buildings have a total floor space of more than 200,000 square feet.

Carloadings on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad for the week ended September 26, totaled 53,243, consisting of 35,260 cars loaded on line and 17,983 received from connections. This was the best week for the current year and the best week also since the week ended April 25, 1931 when the total was 53,426.

Last week's loadings were 15,312 over the same week of 1935, when the total was 37,931, comprising 23,031 cars loaded on line and 14,900 received from connections.

Slump in Corn Carries Other Grains Lower

Anticipated Squeeze at End of Month Fails to Materialize.

Chicago, Sept. 30.—Instead of a month-end squeeze that recently was looked for in corn prices, the bottom dropped out of the corn market late today. The result was to drag all grains down.

Dealers who were under obligation to deliver corn on September contracts had apparently taken time by the forelock and obtained the entire amount requisite despite comparative smallness of supplies here.

Corn futures tumbled nearly 2 cents from the day's top figures and closed unstable 1/2 to 1 1/2 cents under yesterday's finish, December 93 1/2@93 3/4, May 89 1/2@89 3/4, July 85 1/2@85 3/4. Wheat unchanged to 1/4 off, December 112 1/2@113, May 111 1/2@111 3/4, July 98 1/2@98 3/4. Oats 1/2@1/2 1/4 down, December 41 1/4, and rice unchanged to 1/4 up, December 80 1/4. The outcome in provisions varied from 5 cents decline to 25 cents advance.

A MAGNIFICENT NEW APPROACH to a GREAT and FRIENDLY STORE

The Capital's Most Important Business Thoroughfare Now Open to Two-Way Traffic

THE Hecht Company lifts its hat in salute to the great civic project just completed . . . the widening of F street. And our greeting to this new and more beautiful thoroughfare is tinged with a warm and personal pleasure. We pride ourselves on being a neighborly store . . . where community spirit goes hand in hand with a friendly service that stands for customer's happiness. To be a good neighbor it is necessary to be easily accessible, and with the widening of F street, and its development into a two-way thoroughfare, we are now prepared to be a better neighbor, to serve Washington community even more readily and swiftly than ever before. We pause to pay a tribute to the District Commissioners and all others who contributed to this splendid civic improvement.

... and to properly care for all of the cars that will use this new approach to the Hecht Company, our Enlarged Parking Lots (right on the premises) are always at your disposal.

... and our newly enlarged accounting department is prepared to serve you efficiently and speedily. If you do not already enjoy the convenience of a Hecht Co., charge account, we will be glad to open one for you.
